HALL'S HAIR RENEWER.
The great popularity of this preparation, after its use for many years, should be an assurance to the most skeptical, that it is really meritorious. Those who have used HALL'S HAIR RENEWER know that it does all that is claimed for it. It causes new growth of hair on bald heads; restores the hair falling out; gives natural color to gray or faded hair; preserves the scalp healthy and clear; naturally prevents the hair falling out; or changing color; keeps it soft, pliant, lustrous, and causes it to grow long and thick.

BUCKINGHAM'S DYE FOR THE WHISKERS.
Colors them brown or black, as desired, and is the best dye because it is harmless, gives a permanent natural color, and being a simple preparation, is more convenient of application than any other.

Tizwin, the Favorite of the Apache Indians.
The Grand Annual Carouse of the Arizona Tribes at which the Redmen "Hit Up" and Have a Great Time.
The giant cactus, or Saguaro, is peculiar to Arizona. It is a weed, un-outh specimen of vegetation, and its, as its name implies, a giant—the most prominent and numerous vegetable profliferous form. Contrary to the general rule with unique productions in both the animal and vegetable kingdoms, there is no immediate danger of its extinction. It grows in the open for there are portions of Arizona where its lofty fluted columns, standing in open order, dot the landscape as far as the eye can see, covering the desolate plains and foothills like an immense army of sentinels.

NAPOLEON'S DESPONDENCY.

Bad News from His Home Made Him Talk of Suicide.
The agreeable and studious life at Valence was soon ended, writes Prof. Schoone in Century. Early in August, 1793, a little rebellion, known as the "Twenty-fourth," broke out in Lyons over an attempt to reassert an ancient feudal right concerning the sale of wine which had long been in abeyance. The neighboring garrisons were ordered to furnish their respective quotas for its suppression. Bonaparte's company was sent among others, but the disturbance was already quelled when he arrived, and the month he spent at Lyons was so agreeable that he wrote his uncle, Fesch, he left the city with regret "to follow his destiny." His regiment had been ordered northward to Donny in Flanders, and there he rejoined it about the middle of October.

RATS ON THE RAMPAGE.

They Invade a Farmer's Premises and Make a Great Fight.
The village of President, an old-time petroline center, is in the Oil creek of Pennsylvania. There is here a family of operators, had their home, and some of them live there and throughout yet. One of these is Henry Karns. The other day, early in the morning, he heard his pig, which had reached the proper condition for killing, squealing in such an agonizing way in the pen that he knew something was wrong with it. Karns first thought was being for a moment and then, even at this late date, bears venture from the distant woods to the sleepy towns in that part of the valley and try their skill on pigs and sheep. So Karns took his gun and hurried to the pig pen. But instead of bears rats were the impudent invaders of the pig pen and hungry assailants of the pig.

GRIZZLIES OF IDAHO.

A Tact Agreement with Men in the Early Days Not to Molest Each Other.
"Speaking of grizzly bears," said Judge Henry H. Warren to a New York Sun man, "we didn't know these animals as particularly dangerous in Idaho when I was the United States district attorney of that territory. If a man attacked one at close quarters he sometimes got killed, but at a little distance not much more attention was paid to bears than if they had been so many hogs or chickens. Between human beings and bears there seemed to be at that time a tacit agreement to let one another alone."

The heart of the plant, which consists of a soft white pith, is surrounded with a great outer shell formed of long, slender strips of soft tough and stringy wood, standing in a circle and reaching from end to end of the shell. Each strip parallel to the others and all joined together at intervals by cross fibers. These strips, which are called by the natives fish-poles, and the Indians also use them for making their huts, or "wickiups," and frequently construct the entire building with them. The fruit is not the size and shape of a rather small nut, and is attached without stem directly to the blunt end of the shaft and the various limbs. When ripe, the green hull, which has a small black eye at the top, splits open in four lobes, like the calyx of a tulip, disclosing to view an upright, pulpy mass, with the consistency of a fig, and like the latter, ridged with innumerable black seeds. This is delicious when eaten fresh, and also when dried and prepared by the natives as a preserve resembling fig pulp.

The moral and social life of Japan is "That shall love thy father and mother as thyself, thy neighbor as thyself. The Japanese wife loves her own parents more than she does her husband, and a Japanese husband loves his wife with an affection far weaker than that which he bestows on his own father and mother. Mr. Hearn, in "Glimpses of Unfamiliar Japan," quotes this conversation, in a schoolroom, between the English teacher and a Japanese pupil: "Teacher, I have been told that if a European and his father and his wife were all to fall into the sea together, and that he could only swim, he would try to save his wife first. Would he?" "Probably," replied the teacher. "But why?" "One reason is that Europeans consider it a man's duty to help the weaker especially women and children."

FRANCE.—The Duke of Orleans, a part of Tallot county, Md., and connected with the mainland by a bridge, is famous in the Chesapeake region for its canoes. The island is about three square miles in area and is densely populated by a large race of eastern shore men, who gain their living in the waters of the bay. When he or the laws of Maryland interfere with their ordinary pursuits, the Tiltgams' Islanders build canoes, and do it admirably well. The true Chesapeake canoe is still a dugout. Sometimes two or three logs are hollowed for the purpose and joined together. The result is a remarkably staunch, light, and in all waters, and almost indestructible.

The custom of holding these tizwin feasts is common to all the tribes of Arizona, whether Apache, Navaho, friendly Pima or Papago. Among the latter, when the killing point is reached, they content themselves with a victim or two from among their own number, but, when the Apache revelers are at this point, unless the troops on the reservation are numerous enough to hold them well in check, a raid among the white settlers and a long list of outrages is sure to follow.

Gold in the Ocean.
This gold should exist in the ocean is an indication that Dr. Henry Wurtz claims to have presented in 1856, and in 1872 the discovery was announced by E. Sonstadt. A careful computation with the best data obtainable, on the basis of 0.9 grain of gold per ton of sea water, about the proportion assigned by Sonstadt, shows that the great ocean should contain gold to the amount of $80,000,000,000,000,000. The getting of some of this by electrolysis, Dr. Wurtz now predicts, will be one of the problems of the future.

Thought It Would Keep.
Here is an anecdote about a young woman who was making her first essay at housekeeping. A friend had sent her by mail a recipe for some new kind of bread, giving her directions to take a certain portion of the dough at a time and make it into the requisite form for baking. This seemed explicit enough, but what was the surprise of the friend to receive a telegram from the young housekeeper to this effect: "What shall I do with the rest of the dough? Please answer."

NOTHING LIKE PRINTER'S INK.
How It Once Induced James Gordon Bennett to Raise a Pressman's Salary.
James Gordon Bennett is very erratic in his movements. He was one day in his branch offices in Paris, or somewhere without any notice being sent of his coming, and delights to surprise the clerks by overhauling their books and examining their accounts. On one of these occasions, says the Times, he happened to call on a printer, who was one of the pressmen, a man who had worked for the elder Bennett, and was an excellent workman, though guilty of an occasional lapse from sobriety, the black ink, which was in a very quinary as to what excuse he should offer if Mr. Bennett noticed it. Acting on a sudden inspiration he seized an ink roller and rubbed a dab of ink on the side of his face, completely concealing the discolored portion of the skin. Presently Mr. Bennett came into the press room, and with the superintendent, John Hays, went carefully through the matter over and over, looking sharply at each employe. When about to leave he turned suddenly, and, pointing to the besmudged pressman, he said: "Mr. Hays, what is that man's name?" The culprit quaked in his shoes until Mr. Bennett said, slowly: "I want you to give that man three dollars per week more wages; he is the only man in the room who looks as if he had been working."

THE FIRST POLICE SIGNAL.
Crude Device Tried in Honduras to Aid in Apprehending Thieves.
Thirty-five years ago Capt. Mangan, chief of the police force at Honduras, for his own convenience rigged up an electric contrivance, out of which grew the elaborate and comprehensive system of police signals and communication being now in use.
Although the perfection of the system, captain's suggestion has yielded a great manufacturing firm a fortune, not a dollar of it ever came into the hands of the real inventor, says the St. Louis Post-Dispatch.
In the early days of the war a rough gang of men and boys frequently took possession of the Hudson River railroad depot and committed lawless acts. The police station was some distance from the station, and before a messenger could summon assistance the law-breakers would have disappeared. Capt. Mangan thought the matter over and instead of the depot agent and telegraph operator to run a wire from the station to the police office. At the police end a bell and a dial were arranged. The latter had printed on its face three short messages, such as "see an officer," "trouble here; send a full force," etc. The indicator on the dial was made to move by a series of short jerks, caused by key taps, to the desired point on the dial. A practical electrician was engaged to construct the apparatus at work one day. Six months later patents were taken out on the apparatus now in use all over the country, which consists of a box with a dial face upon which are indicated a number of routine questions and answers and the letters of the alphabet, by which any message may be spelled out, a crank being used at one end, the indicator pointing at the other.

Two Big Poker Hands.
Upon Being Two Mississippians Bet Everything They Owned.
"It takes something very good to beat a fellow," said one of Atlanta's most prominent citizens the other day. He had reference to three aces and two kings, says the Constitution. "Yes, sir," he resumed, blowing a great curl of fragrant tobacco smoke high in the air and looking after it lovingly, as though there were a lot of money going up in it. "Yes, sir, it takes something good to beat a fellow house of this variety, but once heard of the steam roller which never has ever was played, I know. It was in the old days and there were two wealthy old Mississippi planters in the game. One of them caught just what I call a bad hand when he was dealt aces and two of the king-kings in the deck. He was dead in it and sent the bets up right lively, indeed. After the others had fallen out except the other steam roller, the man with the full house became more enthusiastic and sent the bet higher and higher. They put up everything they had, borrowed all they could get, and he won, and he had a hot-headed old southerner still sticking against each other. Their plantations were decided on condition of the bet and the dead sealed in envelopes with everything else they had on the face of the earth, and the matter was over it and decided the next day what would be done. Neither of them was willing to call and neither would drop out. So the envelopes were entrusted to the county clerk for safekeeping until the bet should be determined some way or other. Neither of the men ever called as long as they lived, and when both of them were dead and the will of the last one of the was to be probated, it was found that in the envelope of the one there was, together with his deeds, a straight flush, and in the hand of the other the three aces and a pair of kings. The money of the two men was the changes in the ship of the lands as indicated by the value of the hands held by their fathers in that memorable game."

Recognized a Fellow-Craftsman.
Commercial travelers, sometimes called "gumshoes," are not without a reputation, perhaps undeserved, for largeness of statement. Thus we read in the Washington Star that a commercial traveler of the more flashy type had just finished a startling statement when the listener, a new acquaintance, remarked: "That reminds me of one of Munchhausen's yarns," answered the drummer, "who is he?" "Why, don't you know about him? He is the most colossal example of mendacity that civilization has produced."
A moment of silence followed, broken by the commercial traveler. "Excuse me," he said, "would you mind telling me what house he travels for?"
