THOMASTON, Maine, has been invaded by an army of black worms, which seems to have taken complete possession of the town. The worms have stripped the foliage from the elm trees that border the streets, as well as from the apple trees in the suburbs, all of which are as as bare as in midwinter. Pedestrians are obliged to carry umbrellas as protections from the worms which fall from the trees. The most singular feature of the visitation is that no other town in the county has been thus invaded.
