-Dr. Walker, who recently went to Alaska, took a number of horses with him. At the first Indian village the sight of the horses drove all the dogs howling into the woods. The children dropped their rude playthings and went crying into the huts. The men and women stood their ground, although in open-eyed wonder. After much inducement, they were finally prevailed upon to approach the horses, and their wonder knew no bounds. No amount of persuasion would induce them to mount. They were the first horses they had ever met.-New York Tribune.

Mad Dog Scare. The worst mad dog scare ever known in the central part of the state is now terrorizing the residents of Potter's Mills, a small village in the southern part of Centre county. About six weeks ago a strange dog made his appearance at the farm house of Alexander McCoy. It was soon noticed that the dog acted strangely, but little was thought of it at the time. The animal remained only a few days, but before it took its departure had bitten a valuable cow. About a week ago the cow developed one of the worst cases of hydrophobia. She died inside of twenty-four hours, and after removing the hide the carcass was dragged to a ravine in the woods, where it was left unburied. It was only the matter of a few hours until the dogs in the deighborhood found the carcass that several days ago every dog in the vicinity showed unmistabable symptons of rabbies. A reign of terror at once began. The dogs would bite at everything they came across, and one child, was bitten. It was not safe nor is it yet, for any person to venture out unless well armed. A number of the dogs have been killed, but there are yet quite a number of them at large. The boy bitten has not yet shown any alarming symptoms, but there is grave fear that be may do so at any time.
