THE RAGGED LITTLE BOY.

He stood beneath the glaring lights, His clothes were thin and old, That night upon the avenue, He tried to sell his papers, For the people he had no money, And while he strolled on the stones, A tear stood in his eye.

"What will you do when you're a man?" A stranger kindly said, The boy a moment seemed to smile, And then he shook his head: "I couldn't tell you, sir," said he, "And I wouldn't say so, but I may find this land some day."

A lady fair upon whose hand A diamond flashed in light, A moment stopped before the lad, Her dainty fingers drew his purse, And in his hand she held, She strove with just the sweetest smile, Some bright and shining gold.

"When you're a man what will you do?" The wealthy lady cried, "The ever-ready hundredfold," "The little boy replied, "One little room we call our home, Amid the shabby tenements, But I don't say so, but I may find this land some day."

Beneath the starry flag that floats Upon the crest of Freedom, A ragged coat is to be seen, For here all men are free, The little boy who lives in the garrets old and poor, May earn his bread and butter, Sooner than the rich and noble door.

We cannot eat the horsehoe of every boy we meet, And just as we have done, For a mother's prayers are answered in a nation far away, And he who wears a ragged coat, May cure our land some day.

—W. C. Harbison, in Ochs Farmer.

A DEAL IN OSTRICHES.

BY H. G. WELLS.

"Talking of the price of birds, I've seen an ostrich that cost $300," said the taxidermist, reading his youth of travel. "Three hundred pounds?"

"No," he said, "it wasn't any fancy points. They say just plain ostriches. All the other sort, too—owing to that."

There wasn't any particular objection of the demand, either. You'd have thought five ostriches would have held up on an East Indian. But the point was, one of 'em had swallowed a diamond.

"The chap it got it off of," Sir Mubish Padishah, a tremendous scoundrel, said, "you might say, up to the neck of him, and then an ugly black head and a whooping turban, with this diamond in it. The blessed bird pecked suddenly and had it, and when the chap made a face it realized it had done wrong, I suppose, and went and missed itself with the others to preserve its innards. It all happened in a minute. I was among the first to arrive, and there was this heathen going over his pecks, and two scoundrels and the man who had charge of the birds laughing to split. It was a rummy way of losing a jewel, come to think of it. The man in charge hadn't been about just at the moment, so that he didn't know which bird it was. Then, last, you see, I didn't feel half sorry, to tell you the truth. The beggar had been swaggering over his blessed diamond ever since he came aboard."

"A thing like that goes from stem to stem in a ship in no time. Everyone was talking about it. Padishah went below to hide his feelings. At dinner— he pigged at a table by himself, him and two other Hindos—the captain kind of leered at him about it, and he got very excited. He went round and talked into my ear. He would not buy the birds; he would have his diamond. He demanded his rights as a British subject. His diamond must be found. He was firm upon that. He would appeal to the captain if he failed. The man in charge of the birds was one of those wooden-headed chaps you can't get a new idea into anyway. He refused any proposal to interfere with the birds by way of medicine. His instructions were to feed them as usual, and not to treat them so-and-so, and it was as much as his place was worth not to feed them so-and-so and treat them so-and-so. Padishah had wanted a stomach pump—though you can't do that to a bird, you know. This Padishah was full of hot air, like most of those blessed Hindos, and talked of having a lien on the birds, and so forth. But an old boy, who said his son was a London barrister, advised me that a bird swallowed by a man is a fact, and that didn't belong to him. That upset Padishah extremely, the more so as most of us expressed an opinion that that was the reasonable view. There wasn't any lawyer aboard to settle the matter, so we were talking
