Belected Poetry.

BY JAMES BARRON HOPE See the crimson clouds of evening, Lattice-bars across the blue-Where the moon in pailed beauty, Like an angel gazes through,

Over all the winding river, By the fading sunset kist. Slowly rises up the vapor.

In a cloud of ghostly mist. While the Eve is slowly turning Its last grains of golden sand, What a holy quiet hovers. Over all the drowsy land! There is now the spell of silence-

Over all the placid water And the vessels slowly gliding Down the river to the bay; Show on sheets of spreading convass Tints which change from red to gray,

All is quiet save the murmur,

On the tide up in the bar:

See each little breaker playing With the image of a star? And Mis thus that human creatures Bowed with age or fresh in youth, Give back brokenly the imag

CRASS FOR HORES.

Many think that horses that are kept in a stable all summer should not be allowed to eat grass. They think that it will make the whores soft and wishy-washy, and that it will throw him out of condition for hard work. This is particularly the case with some of the trainers of trotting and running horses. And horses that are kept of farm and other work are refused grass because their drivers think they will not cat hay so well. This was formerly the case, more than it is now. But these are all erroneous opinions and practices, and are giving way, gradually, to a more
