But does it waste by being exposed to the elements through the winter? We the elements through at least. It may HENDRICKS & WARREN have purchas think not, chemically at least. It may HENDRICKS & WARREN have purchased in the story formerly occupied by J. A. Girls he washedfor floated off from steep hillhe washedfor floated off from steep hill-and latterly to G. fl. swops, where they sides, or flats liable to overflow. But on ment or level or moderately rolling land, there is probably not only no waste in apis probably not only no waste in applying the manure in the autumn or winter, but it willbenefit the crop grown the next season, much more than if put on in the spring. Some of our best farmers have adopted this/practice, and they find it to work well. How can the manure waste? Will any one tell us? As no fermentation takes place, con sequently no gases are evolved to passed off. But it dries, says one, when there is snow on the ground, by the wind and frosts. Draw out a load of manare; and spread it, and in a day it will not weigh more than a quarter as much as when put on the wagon. True, but what dries out of it? Water-nothing else of value. straw. It is questionable even whether detryshing. They have the very best selection of start and manure will lose any of its fertilizing qualities if spread on the surface of the ground in mid summer, and exposed to the sun and winds till completely dried. The gases that are given off, and taint the sir, are of little value to the crop. They will return in suffi-cient quantities to the plant, by absorption through its leaves.

If the ensuing summer be very dry, a coatlof ordinary barnyard manure may not materially benefit corn, if put on in the spring just before plowing, from the fact that it will not decompose, and become available plant food, from want of moisture early in the food, from want of moisture early in the with an excellent assortment of corn, if put on in the spring just before plowing, from the fact that it will not season. At any rate if applied in the fall the manure would stimulate the corn quicker than if put on late in the spring. If it be wet ground to which the manure applied, it will cause the grass to sprout carlier and ranker, thus furnishing connierable pasture for sheep in the spring. the grass will be so much gained in lieve in manuring in the fall. Clean the lac hog pens, scrape the barn-yards draw ne muck, empty the sinks, and withal prepare for making and saying manure during the winter, so that next autumn, will find you with a more ample supply than ever before.—Rural New ly sent to the pasture to drive up the cows. Often they have an adjourned game at ball to play; or a fish to catch, hence, if not specially cautioned and watched, will "put the cow through on double-quick." This is a bad practice It injures the health of the animal, vitiates their milk, and diminishes the flow of it. Cows in warm weather and with distended udders, should never be hurried in this way.
