This practice, which is so common-in British sericulture, is but little known in our country outside of New Jersey and Pennsylvania. In a recent visit toxthe grain growing districts of these States, we found lime as highly estremed as manure, and a regular part of their rotation, as we have noticed elsewhere. Where lime can be had at ten cents a bushel and under, as it can in all the limestone regions of Pennsylvania, the practice is almost universal. It is used a good deal on farms, far distant from the lime-kilns, where it costs at the depot or canal twenty cents a bushel and upwards. The conviction of its utility in these States may be said to be universal, and if it is not used, it is either owing to the high price of the article, or to the fact that agriculture receives little attention.

It is applied by some to the sod immediately after mowing and this sod isturned under either in the fall orspring for corn. It is claimed that the lime stimulates the the growth of grass, and affects favorably every crop in the rotation. It would be , without liming, to keep up the grain farms to the present degree of productiveness. It is also claimed for the summer application and the spring plowing, that it distributes the lime more equally, and keeps it near the surface. The lime which is carried down by the fall or winter rains, is brought to the surface again when the sod is inverted. By this method also, the lime has more time to act upon the inert material in the soil. and to prepare plant food for the subsequent crop. Other farmers are quite as certain that the best time to apply lime is upon the inverted sod in the spring, while the ground is preparing for corn. They want to keep the lime as near the surface as possible, and have no fears of its late action upon the crop. The quanti-ty applied to the acre is from thirty to a bundred buhsels, depending somewhat upon the character of the soil, the price BREAD, CRACKERS, CAKES, PRETZELS, &c. of the lime, and the theofetical views of the planter. The better the soil, that is the more clay and vegetable matter it contains, the more lime it will bear. Some think a hundred bushels quite too much, and that so much has a tendency to turn the stalks yellow, and to diminish the yield. Smaller quantities, say from 30 to 50 bushels, are more commonly applied. The lime is usually brought from the lime-kiln or depot in its caustic state, and is dropped upon the land in heaps by the application of water and is about doubled in quantity by this process. It the land. This makes a cheap dressing for the land even at twenty cents a bushel. The effect is very clearly marked where it is used. It keeps up the fertility of the soil, and makes remunerative crops even without manure. Of course, with manure the crops are larger and pay better. The question very naturally arises, if liming land will pay in other districts where it is not now used,-Without answering this question at once in the affirmative, we think the results in these States are such as to encourage every farmer who can get lime at a reasonable price to make the experiment. We have abundance of lime rock in regions where it is not burned at all. The conviction is quite common that it will not nay to use lime on ilmestone soils. but in Pennsylvania the effects of the application are quite as marked upon these soils as upon any other. Then it is supposed that it is a difficult and expen sive process to burn lime. Very much of this article is made upon the farms where it is used whithout even a kiln for burning. The lime can be made by the most unskilled labor, and with the roughest and cheapest kinds of fuel. Wherever there is lime rock and cheap fuel, we have no doubt the lime can be furnished at less than twenty cents a bushel. In
