A spectre strode across the land last night Whose brow grew dark beneath the stars At length, close muffled in a cowl, he stood In the dark ontakirts of a hillside wood.

His eyes were glassy, but their glance was bold His breath was chill—his shriveled fingers cold He stretched his key hands abroad; alas! The light dew froze to chrystal on the grass The fair green leaves began to crisp and curl With all the radiant tinting of a pearl, And rustling mournful requiems in the wind In death, like lovers fond, together twined. The few surviving flowers grew wan and pale, Their dying odors fed the pittless gale. And showers of quivering petals in the gloom Of a near churchyard, drifted round a tomb. The graceful ferns drooped lower than before,

The prickly chemut burs dropped slowly down And ghastly grinned with teeth of polished brow Hill, forest, field and vale grew sere and dry, With sad, dumb silence, as if wondering why. TRUE AS PREACHING.

If men and women were willing to live within their incomes, disposed to begin life at the bottom the ladder, obey the primary impulses of their nature, and enter upon the cares, trials, and pleasures of the domestic circle, bind their hearts and wind their hopes around the family altar, they would be greatly the gainers. But here comes the difficulty—they must live when they begin, just as others are llving, or in better style perhaps, who for thirty or forty years have been carefully and economically journeying along, until they found they could afford to show off a little. It would be well if our modern parlor or sitting room floors, nor do we believe she had a chambermaid to nurse and run after little Cain and Abel. MR. AND MRS. LINCOLN. There are certain newspapers of the Republican persuasion—the "moral dea" type-who protest with great vehemence against popular subscriptions of money to aid Mrs. Lincoln. Many, indeed most of them, start out with the proposition that Mr. Lincoln was a modol of pecuniary and political virtue, while his wife was and is quite the opposite. The arguments of these journals are of three classes. One is that Mr. Lincoln, before his election to be President, had next to no property whatever, and his wife had thus been accustomed to a life of simple small expenditure, so that it ought not to be a hardship to her to now live with economy, as it would to a woman reared in luxury.
