Two little pairs of boots to-night Iwo intue pairs of boots to-night Before the fire are drying; Two little pairs of tired feet in the trundle-bed are lying; The track they leave upon the floor Makes me feel much like sighing. These little boots with copper toes,

They run the livelong day, And often times I almost wish

That they were miles away;

So tired I am to hear no Their heavy tramp at play. They walk about the new plow'd ground Where mud in plenty fles; They roll it up in marbles round, And bake it into ples; And then at night upon the floor In every shape it dries.

To-day I was disposed to scold; But when I look to-night At those small boots before the fire, With copper toes so bright, I think how sad my heart would be, To put them out of sight. For in a trunk up-stairs I've laid Two socks of white and blue; If called to put those toots away, O God! what should I do?

I mourn that there are not to-night Three pairs instead of two. I mourn, because I thought how nice M3 neighbor "'cross the way" Could keep her carpets all the year From getting worn and gray; Yet well I knew she'd smile to own some little boys to-day!

We mothers weary get and worn Over our load of care; But how we speak of those dear ones, Let each of us heware; What would our firesides be to-night li no small boots were there "Are there any more of these letters?" When her father asked this question, n an awful tone, Lucilla Richmond could not say "no," and dared not say 'ves." but as an intermediate course ourst into tears, and sobbed behind her handkerchief. "Bring them to me, Lucilla," said her father, as if she had answered him, as, indeed, she had; and the girl, trembling and weeping, arose to obey him. Then Mrs. Richmond, her daughter's very self grown older, came behind her lot them sell you for gold, Lucilla." husband's chair and patted him on the Great heavens, what impertinent shoulder.

"Please don't be hard with her, my dear," she said, coaxingly. "He's a nice young man, and it is our fault, after all, all the new dear." is much as her's, and you won't break er young heart, I'm sure."

"Perhaps you approve of the whole dlair, ma'am," said Mr. Richmond. · "I-no-that is, I only"—gasped the little woman; and, hearing Lucilla coming, she sank into a chair, blaming herself dreadfully for not having been present at all her daughter's music lessons during the past year.
For all this disturbance arose from a music teacher who had given lessons to Miss Lucilla for twelve months, and who had taken the liberty of falling in love with her, knowing well that she was the daughter of one of the richest men in Yorkshire.

"It was inexcusable in a poor music teacher, sho should have known his place," Mr. Richmond declared, and he clutched the little pertumed billet which had tallen into his hands as he might a scorpion, and waited for the others with a took doon his tace which told of no softening. They came at last-six, little white envelopes, tied together with blue ribbon, and were laid at his elbow by his despairing daughter.

"Look these up dutil I return home this evening," he said to his wife; "I will read them then. Meanwhile, Lucilla is not to see this music master on any pretence."
