What is the Best Temperature of Stables for Wintering Stock?

ted for the health and thrift of animals is scarcely ever discussed. We do not remember to have seen any account of experiments made in this country to determine the point. Some farmers talk about very warm stables as the best for wintering stock, saying that the more warmth your get, the less food is required. Others would have stables quite cool, at least at that degree of temperature which results from boarding the sides up and down after the old-style of barns, leaving the cracks or jointings between the boards open. . They contend that in such quarters stock comes out more healthy and lively in spring, and that if it does take a Hitle more for gain is greater on account of the more robust condition of the animals.

We remember to have heard this matter discussed by two extensive and experienced dairymen at the meeting of a town club, the one advocating stables built with stone walls and partly underground, and the other, stables standing high and with the old fashioned siding eferred to. The latter disputant referred to some experiments which he had made test the matter. He had two stables of the description named-the one sided up with boards, and the other with walls, and partially under ground. He divided mostly of his own manufacture consisting of his stock, keeping about half in each.-Those under ground consumed the least food, but on turning them out to water, COATS, the cold air seemed to pierce them through and through. They were shivering with cold even in moderate weather, vhile the others seemed warm and comfortable. Toward spring he found them in a weak and unhealthy condition, and he was convinced the animals had been kept too warm. Hence he had abandoned the stable, and had never used it after for wintering stock.

cold, there will be a waste of fodder to keep the stock warm. If the stable is too warm, the animals will be subject to disease and in bad health, and the loss from the latter evil will, perhaps, overbalance that of the former. From experiments made in England for the purpose of sceins at what degree of temperature different animals thrive best and put on fat, it was found that the temperature between 55 and 90 degrees was conducive to the best results for animals of the short horn breed; and it was found that oxen sweat at a temperature in which heifers thrive admirably. The question is of more importance than one would naturally suppose from the small amount of investigation that has been bestowed upon it. Are we to run the risk of wasting expenditure of food by perspiring under excessive heat, or are we to induce the animals to waste it to keep up animal heat by exposure to too much cold? And, then another question comes in here-will not different cinsues of animals, as well as animals of the same class, but of different ages, be subject to different consequences from the same degree of heat? In the same stables some animals may be too hot and others too cold from different consti-

It would seem that we need some carefully conducted experiments to arrive at a piont which may be regarded as a standard. How to STEW OYSTERS.-We suppose that files out of ten housekeepers will IF you want good Paper Collars, go to NORRIS'. contradict us point blank, in a statement that nine out of ten of them do not know how to stew a dish of oysters. By the ordinary routine that nearly every one follows, either the oysters are stewed and shrivelled out of all semblance to themtelves in shape, size and flavor, or else the soup and "thickening" has a raw taste that, spoils it. Here is the right method. Try it once, and we'll warrant you won't need telling the second time. Pick the oysters out of the juice, thickening, milk or water, of which the soup is to be made, until thoroughly cooked; then drop the oysters in, and just as the cooled soup begins to show signs of simmering, empty all out together, and you will have rich soup and plump oysters, luscious enough to make you think you never tasted real oysters before.-Ex-

Can Fuer Cold feet are a general affliction, and cures for them are in demand. A contemporary says that it is assured by one who has given the experiment a trial, that cold feet and especially those superlatively rigid feet that are kept chilled by perspiration, may be relieved by a simple expedient. to wear cotton socks next to the skin and woolen socks outside of them. It states that "in the lustance of our informant the result was successful in keeping his feet warm and dry. The singular conse-quench also caused, that at night he would find the cotton socks (next his ekin) quite dry, while the outside woolen stockings would be very damp,"

Ir every farmer who cats a fine pear would save and plant the seed, and after planting, note the progress of the young trees, we should soon have a much larger and better variety of pears than at pre ent. The world-ranownod Anthor, in this admirable

Lecture, obserly proves, from his ewn experience, that the awful consequences of Self-Abuse may be effectually removed without medicine, and without dangerous surgical operations, bougies, instruments, rings, or cordials—polating out a mode of cure at once certain and effectual, by which every sufferer, no matter what his condition may be, may cure himself cheaply, privately, and radically.

This Lecture will prove a boon to thousands
