PRIDAY, PERRUIRY 14, 1868. MANAGREENT OF THE MANURE HEAP.

The time is now approaching when the manufacture and collection of manure will be commenced in carnest by most farmers. A few hints on the management of the manure heap may not be out of place. Every manure heap consists of three portions, and these require very different means for their preservation. We have first the carbonaceous matter. This forms the chief bulk of every manue fiesh, and from the fact that it came originally from the atmosphere, and that it can be replaced from the same source, theorists who have not excefully watched the results attained in practice, are apt to depreciate its value. It is not is valuable as the other two constituents, but it serves to bring the land into fine, friable, mellow condition, and it is by no means certain that the carbonic acid furnished by its decomposition, is not a source of plant food. Under any circumtances, however, it is well to be economical of it, and allow none to go to waste.

The second portion is the inorganic plant food contained in the straw and in the food of animals. It consists of phosphoricacid, lime, potach, soda, magnesia, oluble silica, &c., and the great source of loss of these constituents is from their being washed out. They cannot evaporate, but if the rain and liquid manure are allowed to fall on a manure heap, and drain through it and out of it, the manure pile becomes a mere caput mortuum—a worthless residuum of originally valuable materials. Hence every barnyard where manure is kept exposed to the weather, should be hollowed out in the centre, and well puddled, so as to prevent the soluble matters from draining or soaking away. Moreover, if the farm is located in a region where much rain falls, it is necessary to place a large portion of the barnyard under the cover of sheds, which prevent excessive wetting. Some mois ture is absolutely necessary. Too much is decidedly injurious.

The third constituent of the manure heap is nitrogen. This is a substance of care should be taken to preserve and increase it. We do not propose here to enter minutely into its chemical relations, but would merely offer one or two uggestions for fixing and preserving it. When vegetable substances containing nitrogen, undergo putrefaction, in a moist state, the nitrogen in general besame process of putrefaction, however, produces carbonic scid in large quantitica, and this combines with the ammo-nia to form carbonate of ammonia. This salt is comparatively volatile, and if the SUGARS, COFFEES, TEAS, MOLASES, SYR manure is allowed to dry up while exposed in thin layers, the ammonia disappears. Several agents may be set to work to fix and retain it.

monin dissolves very readily in water, and does not then evaporate to the same extent that it would do from a dry mass The great agent in the fixing of ammonia on the manure beap is the humicand similar acids produced during the decomposition of straw. These acids do it very effectually, and bence the importance of mixing animal excrement with a large proportion of moist straw.

One of the most powerful fixers of ammonia is plaster or sulphate of lime. When this substance meets corbonate of ammonia in solution, decomposition on sues. Carbonate of lime and sulphate of numonia are formed, and as sulphate of ammonia is not volatile at an ordinary temperature, there is no danger of loss except by its being washed out. Hence a few simple rules will enable us to manage a manure heap so as to avoid any very great love. 1st. Prevent all loss by drainage and soaking.

2d. See that the animal excrements

3d. See that while too much water avoided, there is a sufficiency to keep the

are corcred with moist straw.

4th. Moisture and packing prevent fire fariging-that is, too rapid fermentation. 5th. If you find it convenient to use a few bushels of plaster, sprinkle them ver the kous so that th ster will be incorporated with the successive layers. It will thus prove of great service .-Country Gentleman.

A THRIFTY FARMER, who "believe in making old things last in these times,' says: "There is one thing that nearly everybody knows and hardly anybody attends to—that is; to sprinkle slacked lime on their roofs once a year, either in fall or in spring. If the shingles are covered ever so thick with moss, the lime soon clears it off, leaving the roof clean and white, and good for a dozen years longer. It ought to be nut on pretty thick, and a rainy day is the best for the work. Strong wood ashes will answer almost as well to keep roofs in repair, but they will not look as nice. To make new shingles last three or four times the usual period, they need only to be soaked a few days in a tank half full of thick lime water, which must be stirred up well before the shingles are put in."

A MONGREL reflect says "one-nail the homesteads of the South are in the hands of the sheriff."
