THOROUGH CULTIVATION. Here are some facts, stated by Dr. Volkner in a lecture on the atmospheric nutrition of plants, before the Royal Agricultural Society, as to the importance of screting and pulverizing heavy soils. But one of the difficulties met with in their cultivation is that of performing it at exactly the right time. If clayey land is ploughed when too wet, it is next to impossible to reduce it to good order and sales increasing. by after treatment; and if too dry, it is an exceedingly laborous task to do any thing with it. The necessity of constant watchfulness on the part of the farmer never greater, than in the exercise of due judgment as to the time, as well as sufficient diligence in the amount of culture he gives his land.

Let us briefly state some of the advantages of thorough cultivation. It involes 1. The mechanical pulverization o the soil, giving a better seed-bed, and making the particles more accessible to the action of the roots.

"2. Better drainage, the soil being moist and mellow where it would other wise be baked and hard 3. The co-operation of the atmosphere mposing the comminuted particles of soil, and setting free the mineral elements for the growing plant. "4. The absorption from the atmosphere of a greater portion of its ammonia and carbonic acid for the direct, nourishment of vegetable life. "5. The increased effect of manures from their more complete intermixture, and consequently more perfect action. "6. The cleansing of the lands from weeds, which not only abstract the nourishment due to the growing crop, but also generate successors, continually multiplying themselves from year to

of a reaper or mower, and leads to fre quent breakages, to cut through the clods on the roughly seaded fields."

It should not be forgotten how efficient an agent in the pulverization of a heavy soil is the alternate freezing and thawing of winter. By sutumn ploughing to ef feet this, more can be accomplished than by much labor otherwise applied. Under-draining also contributes greatly to the same end. And while much that has been said above applies especially to heavy lands, it must not be forgotten that it has a wider bearing. "Sandy loams," says Robert Russel. "are benefited more than any other class of soils by tillage, which increases their absorbing powers." These qualities fit them especially for turnip husbandry. So also in America the sandy loams are well suited for maise, and its culture in summer.-Deep cultivation, more especially in dry increasing the retentive and absorbent-qualities of light soils. The benefits of cultivation are apparent from the fact that grasses on sandy loams are liable to be searched by the drought of summer, to a greater degree than the turnips in a well drilled field. - Mass. Plough

HOW FOWLS GRIND THEIR POOD. On this subject, S. Edward Todd dis-

courses as follows: Fowls have no teeth to grind or masticate their food with, d the best they are able to do with it is to neck it to pieces and swallow it whole. Kernels of grain are swallowed whole by them, and as they are surrounded by a tough pellicle or skin, which the juice of the stomachs of the animals will not readily dissolve or digest, they could obtain no nourishment as all from grain if this tough pellicle were not broken. Now, if we dissect the gizzard of a fowl of any kind, we find a lot of small gravel stones, which are subusily the hardest kind of flint, granition sand stone. Surely here is a pocket edition of farm grist readily dissolve or digest, they could

Fowls swallow theld food, broken or not, and it enters the grop or first stom-ach, and remains in it antil is has become softened, more or less, when a small quantity at a time, just as grain runs into a grist mill, is forced into the gizzard among the gravel stones. This gizzard is a strong muscular stomach, and plays night and day, when there is a grist to grind, similar to bellows, contracting and expanding, thus forcing the gravel into fragments, and triturating the whole mass; after which it is in a suitable con dition to be quickly disgested.

VALUE OF POULTRY MANURE.

There is no manure made on a farm so valuable as that of poultry. One ounce of it properly diffused in half a pound of d placed in a hill of corn when planted; will be as powerful a fertilizer as ten times its weight in barn-yard manure. A foreign writer says: 'In France, as well as in our own country, most eminent chemists have proved by analysis that poultry manure is most valuable fertilizer, and yet, for Has bought back his old stand, on Carliale street, want of proper system in housing poul- and is going into business again heavier than try, it has as yet not been rendered avail- ever. Some people never think of a revenue stamp when writing a letter; yet some BREAD, CRACKERS, CAKES, PRETZELS, & letters require stamping as much as a note or deed. Under the internal revenue laws, letters acknowledging the reestat of either drafts, checks or money, exceeding $20, are subject to a stamp duty of two cents, the same as if a for mal receipt had been given for so much money. This fact is sometimes forzet in, or is not known, even by good busi-
