GOVERNOR SEYMOUR'S LETTER OF ACCEPTANCE.

UTICA, N. Y., August 1, 1868. GENTLEMEN: When, in the City of New York on the 11th of July, in the presence of a vast multitude, on behalf of the National Democratic Convention, you tendered to me its unanimous nomination as its candidate for the office of President of the United States, I stated that no words "adequate to express my gratitude for the good will and kindness which that body had shown to me, its nomination was unsought and unexpected. It was my ambition to take an active part from which I am now excluded, in the great struggle going on for the restoration of good government, of peace and prosperity to our country.

Events in Congress since the adjournment of the Convention have vastly increased the importance of a political victory by those who are seeking to bring back economy, simplicity, and justice to our Government, and our national affairs. Many of our countrymen have heretofore eluded to their party who have regretted the extremes of violence to which it has run. They have cherished a faith that while the action of their political friends has been good, they must see that the Republican party is in that condition that it cannot carry out a wise and peaceful policy, whatever its motives may be. It is a misfortune, not only to a country but to a governing party itself, when its action is unadvised by any form of opposition.

I have been the witness of the Republican party that the events of the past few years have given it so much power that it has been able to shake the Executive, to trammel the Judiciary, and to carry out the views of the most unwise and violent of its members. When this state of things exists in any party, it has ever been found that the sober judgments of its ablest leaders do not control. There show an alarm lest a charge of political power will give to the people what they ought to have during a clear statement of the facts, and a record of the years drawn from them during the past eight years. Thoughtful men feel that there have been wrongs in the financial management, which have been kept from the public knowledge. The Congressional party has not only allied itself with military power, which is to be sought for, but has directly urged the elections in many States, but it also holds itself in perpetual session, with the avowed purpose of making such laws as shall be fit, in view of the elections which will take place within a few weeks. It did not, therefore, seem to me that it was proper to demand its partisan interests should prevail in the history of our country has Congress thus taken a menacing attitude towards its elections. Under its influence some of the States organized by its agents are proposing to deprive the people of the right to hold the judicial elections, and the first bold steps are taken to destroy the rights of suffrage. It is not strange, therefore, that thoughtful men see in such action the proof that there are such those who shape the policy of the Republican party, motives stronger and deeper than the Republic's love of freedom and justice. Many of the ablest leaders and journals of the Republican party have openly deplored the violence of Congressional action, and its tendency to destroy the Republic's love of freedom and justice. Many of the ablest leaders and journals of the Republican party have openly deplored the violence of Congressional action, and its tendency to destroy the Republic's love of freedom and justice.

There are those who are interested in putting some check upon this violence. It must be clear to every thinking man that a division of political power tends to check the violence of party action and to assure the peace and good order of the Republic. The election of a Democratic Executive, and a majority of Democratic members to the House of Representatives, would not give to that party organization the power to make sudden or violent changes, but it would serve to check those extreme measures which have been taken to hold the Republic in a state of anarchy. The result would most certainly lead to that peaceful restoration of fraternal relationship which the country desires. I am sure that the best men of the Republic will not only support as deeply as I do the spirit of wisdom shown by those recently admitted to seats in Congress from the South. The condition of civil war which they contemplate must be abhorrent to every right thinking man.

I have no mere personal wishes to express in this letter, but in regard to the pending election. No man who has weighed and measured the duties of the office of President of the United States, can fail to be impressed with the care which the people have shown in the selection of a President. It is not merely to elect a President, but to elect a policy or a purpose. On the contrary, while our Constitution gives weight to the public will, its distinguishing feature is that it seeks to protect the rights of minorities. Its great glory is that it puts restraints upon power. It gives justice and form to the maxims and principles of civil liberty for which its martyrs of freedom have struggled through ages. It declares the right of the people to be secure in their persons, houses and papers against unreasonable searches and seizures, and to be free from the oppression of a standing army, and to be free from the oppression of a standing army, and to be free from the oppression of a standing army.

No man can rightfully enter upon the duties of the Presidential office, unless he is not only willing to carry out the wishes of the people expressed in a constitutional way, but also prepared to stand up for the rights of minorities. He must be ready to uphold the free exercise of religion. He must denounce measures which would wrong personal or home rights, or the religious conscience of the humblest citizen of the land. He must maintain without distinction of creed or nationality, all the privileges of American citizenship. The experience of every public man who has been faithful to his trust teaches him that no one can do the duties of the office of President, unless he is ready not only to undergo the falsehoods and abuse of the press, but to suffer the contumacious and unscrupulous attacks of those who are misled by prejudice and misrepresentation. There are no attractions in such positions, which deceive my judgment, when I say that a great change is going on in the public mind. The mass of the Republican party are more thoughtful, temperate and just than they were during the excitement which attended the progress and close of the civil war. As the energy of the Democratic party springs from their devotion to their cause and not to their ambition, I may with propriety speak of the fact that there is the political history of our country has the action
