

There hangs a babe, and there's a pain, With rusty blade and green envenomed chain, A pair of arms on the old girl's back, A monthly saddle—well, that is all.

Come out to the stable; it is not far, The moss-grown door is hanging ajar, Look within! There's an empty stall, Where once stood a charger—and that is all.

The good black steed came rickshaw home, Packed with blood-grogs as well as foam, Do you see that mould, where the dead leaves fall? The good black horse pined to death—that is all.

All! Oh, God! This is all I can speak, Question me not—I am old and weak, His saddle and harness hang on the wall, And his horse pined to death—I have told you all.

Persevere and Prosper, AN ARABIAN TALE, BY JOHN G. WALKER. "To the manly will there's never a lack," Said a simple Arab, looking at a Turk, "And I'm going to try this way."

His eyes were fixed on the good old man, "Now, please remember my dear, You're sure to win, whatever you plan, If you steadily persevere?"

"I mean to try, upon my life— If I go through fire and water; And, when I wish to marry, will I'll have the girl's daughter?"

So off to the village straight he took, Who only laughed at the old man's talk, And said he'd never give his daughter in marriage to a man who spoke in that way.

For he thought the fellow was mad— And still for many a weary day, He came to plead his case, But the father only answered "Nay," And said he'd never give his daughter in marriage to a man who spoke in that way.

At last, the father's heart was won, And he gave his daughter to the man, Who had so long and patiently, And with so much of patience, been so patient.

And he gave his daughter to the man, Who had so long and patiently, And with so much of patience, been so patient.

And he gave his daughter to the man, Who had so long and patiently, And with so much of patience, been so patient.

And he gave his daughter to the man, Who had so long and patiently, And with so much of patience, been so patient.

And he gave his daughter to the man, Who had so long and patiently, And with so much of patience, been so patient.

And he gave his daughter to the man, Who had so long and patiently, And with so much of patience, been so patient.

And he gave his daughter to the man, Who had so long and patiently, And with so much of patience, been so patient.

And he gave his daughter to the man, Who had so long and patiently, And with so much of patience, been so patient.

And he gave his daughter to the man, Who had so long and patiently, And with so much of patience, been so patient.

Fish's Resting Place. In all the town of Brestleboro, says a correspondent, there is no more beautiful spot than the place where Col. Fisk is buried. The village cemetery is on the top of a hill, sloping down on one side to the Concord, on the other calculating all the glories of sunset, as across the churchyard grass the rays of the setting sun linger longest. The lot which Col. Fisk purchased only a few months before his death, is one of the pleasantest in the cemetery; it overlooks the Concord, and is evenly levelled on the right side of the hill overlooking the river, it is yet neither dark nor gloomy, for the sun strikes through the boughs all day, making flickering shadows on the dirt, soft green of the grass, and touching the flowers that always adorn the spot into new freshness and brightness. Beside baskets, two stand on each side of the grave, filled like the lot which Col. Fisk purchased only a few months before his death, is one of the pleasantest in the cemetery; it overlooks the Concord, and is evenly levelled on the right side of the hill overlooking the river, it is yet neither dark nor gloomy, for the sun strikes through the boughs all day, making flickering shadows on the dirt, soft green of the grass, and touching the flowers that always adorn the spot into new freshness and brightness.

Five Years a Squaw. The Kansas City (Mo.) Times has the following particulars of a story briefly told in the Standard. The country of the month's trip to Fort Benton and the mountains. Among her miscellaneous adventures, she was a female named Miss Amara Barber, who, in a fit of fanciful romance, offered herself, in 1867, as a voluntary missionary to the Indians of Nebraska, and the Big Horn mountains, Dakota Territory. Miss Barber created quite a sensation in the Eastern States, then occupying the territory between the Cheyenne river and the Big Horn mountains, Dakota Territory. Miss Barber created quite a sensation in the Eastern States, then occupying the territory between the Cheyenne river and the Big Horn mountains, Dakota Territory.

The West Point Cadet. The life of a cadet at the United States Military Academy is not a very pleasant one by any means, for he has a daily round of changing duties and recreations, spiced with adventures after school hours, and a variety of other things that every student is in bed. He is supposed to be a student of the law, and is atoned from a sound sleep at five o'clock by the morning gun, and the morning horse, and must perform all the duties of a cadet in a few minutes. At half-past five he must have his room in order. He must attend to the Department of the day, and must perform all the duties of a cadet in a few minutes.

Our Boston Correspondence. THE GREAT JUBILEE—WEST STRAITS. THE FAVORITE BARS—THE BALL—THE OFFICIALS TO GILBERT. Multifarious have gathered here this week, to attend the second week's performances at the Coliseum, and all have been delighted with a few musical critics of the New York daily papers. These few fastidious young men, are too wise for their day and generation. On Tuesday last, the musical journal, the Standard, published a long and elaborate review of 50,000 people. The article published that followed almost every piece on the programme, showed that the music had kindled an enthusiasm which was as unanimous as it was unqualified. The wailing of handkerchiefs, the gasping, the clapping of hands, all over the vast assembly, could not have been excited by ordinary means. It would be hard to imagine that anyone but a graduate of a deaf, dumb and blind asylum, could fall to yield to the influences of the occasion, and the New York critics were not unimpressed by the grandeur of the performance.

Persevere and Prosper. AN ARABIAN TALE, BY JOHN G. WALKER. "To the manly will there's never a lack," Said a simple Arab, looking at a Turk, "And I'm going to try this way."

Fish's Resting Place. In all the town of Brestleboro, says a correspondent, there is no more beautiful spot than the place where Col. Fisk is buried. The village cemetery is on the top of a hill, sloping down on one side to the Concord, on the other calculating all the glories of sunset, as across the churchyard grass the rays of the setting sun linger longest. The lot which Col. Fisk purchased only a few months before his death, is one of the pleasantest in the cemetery; it overlooks the Concord, and is evenly levelled on the right side of the hill overlooking the river, it is yet neither dark nor gloomy, for the sun strikes through the boughs all day, making flickering shadows on the dirt, soft green of the grass, and touching the flowers that always adorn the spot into new freshness and brightness.

The West Point Cadet. The life of a cadet at the United States Military Academy is not a very pleasant one by any means, for he has a daily round of changing duties and recreations, spiced with adventures after school hours, and a variety of other things that every student is in bed. He is supposed to be a student of the law, and is atoned from a sound sleep at five o'clock by the morning gun, and the morning horse, and must perform all the duties of a cadet in a few minutes. At half-past five he must have his room in order. He must attend to the Department of the day, and must perform all the duties of a cadet in a few minutes.

Our Boston Correspondence. THE GREAT JUBILEE—WEST STRAITS. THE FAVORITE BARS—THE BALL—THE OFFICIALS TO GILBERT. Multifarious have gathered here this week, to attend the second week's performances at the Coliseum, and all have been delighted with a few musical critics of the New York daily papers. These few fastidious young men, are too wise for their day and generation. On Tuesday last, the musical journal, the Standard, published a long and elaborate review of 50,000 people. The article published that followed almost every piece on the programme, showed that the music had kindled an enthusiasm which was as unanimous as it was unqualified.

Persevere and Prosper. AN ARABIAN TALE, BY JOHN G. WALKER. "To the manly will there's never a lack," Said a simple Arab, looking at a Turk, "And I'm going to try this way."

Fish's Resting Place. In all the town of Brestleboro, says a correspondent, there is no more beautiful spot than the place where Col. Fisk is buried. The village cemetery is on the top of a hill, sloping down on one side to the Concord, on the other calculating all the glories of sunset, as across the churchyard grass the rays of the setting sun linger longest. The lot which Col. Fisk purchased only a few months before his death, is one of the pleasantest in the cemetery; it overlooks the Concord, and is evenly levelled on the right side of the hill overlooking the river, it is yet neither dark nor gloomy, for the sun strikes through the boughs all day, making flickering shadows on the dirt, soft green of the grass, and touching the flowers that always adorn the spot into new freshness and brightness.

The West Point Cadet. The life of a cadet at the United States Military Academy is not a very pleasant one by any means, for he has a daily round of changing duties and recreations, spiced with adventures after school hours, and a variety of other things that every student is in bed. He is supposed to be a student of the law, and is atoned from a sound sleep at five o'clock by the morning gun, and the morning horse, and must perform all the duties of a cadet in a few minutes. At half-past five he must have his room in order. He must attend to the Department of the day, and must perform all the duties of a cadet in a few minutes.

Our Boston Correspondence. THE GREAT JUBILEE—WEST STRAITS. THE FAVORITE BARS—THE BALL—THE OFFICIALS TO GILBERT. Multifarious have gathered here this week, to attend the second week's performances at the Coliseum, and all have been delighted with a few musical critics of the New York daily papers. These few fastidious young men, are too wise for their day and generation. On Tuesday last, the musical journal, the Standard, published a long and elaborate review of 50,000 people. The article published that followed almost every piece on the programme, showed that the music had kindled an enthusiasm which was as unanimous as it was unqualified.

Persevere and Prosper. AN ARABIAN TALE, BY JOHN G. WALKER. "To the manly will there's never a lack," Said a simple Arab, looking at a Turk, "And I'm going to try this way."

Fish's Resting Place. In all the town of Brestleboro, says a correspondent, there is no more beautiful spot than the place where Col. Fisk is buried. The village cemetery is on the top of a hill, sloping down on one side to the Concord, on the other calculating all the glories of sunset, as across the churchyard grass the rays of the setting sun linger longest. The lot which Col. Fisk purchased only a few months before his death, is one of the pleasantest in the cemetery; it overlooks the Concord, and is evenly levelled on the right side of the hill overlooking the river, it is yet neither dark nor gloomy, for the sun strikes through the boughs all day, making flickering shadows on the dirt, soft green of the grass, and touching the flowers that always adorn the spot into new freshness and brightness.

The West Point Cadet. The life of a cadet at the United States Military Academy is not a very pleasant one by any means, for he has a daily round of changing duties and recreations, spiced with adventures after school hours, and a variety of other things that every student is in bed. He is supposed to be a student of the law, and is atoned from a sound sleep at five o'clock by the morning gun, and the morning horse, and must perform all the duties of a cadet in a few minutes. At half-past five he must have his room in order. He must attend to the Department of the day, and must perform all the duties of a cadet in a few minutes.

Our Boston Correspondence. THE GREAT JUBILEE—WEST STRAITS. THE FAVORITE BARS—THE BALL—THE OFFICIALS TO GILBERT. Multifarious have gathered here this week, to attend the second week's performances at the Coliseum, and all have been delighted with a few musical critics of the New York daily papers. These few fastidious young men, are too wise for their day and generation. On Tuesday last, the musical journal, the Standard, published a long and elaborate review of 50,000 people. The article published that followed almost every piece on the programme, showed that the music had kindled an enthusiasm which was as unanimous as it was unqualified.

Persevere and Prosper. AN ARABIAN TALE, BY JOHN G. WALKER. "To the manly will there's never a lack," Said a simple Arab, looking at a Turk, "And I'm going to try this way."

Fish's Resting Place. In all the town of Brestleboro, says a correspondent, there is no more beautiful spot than the place where Col. Fisk is buried. The village cemetery is on the top of a hill, sloping down on one side to the Concord, on the other calculating all the glories of sunset, as across the churchyard grass the rays of the setting sun linger longest. The lot which Col. Fisk purchased only a few months before his death, is one of the pleasantest in the cemetery; it overlooks the Concord, and is evenly levelled on the right side of the hill overlooking the river, it is yet neither dark nor gloomy, for the sun strikes through the boughs all day, making flickering shadows on the dirt, soft green of the grass, and touching the flowers that always adorn the spot into new freshness and brightness.

The West Point Cadet. The life of a cadet at the United States Military Academy is not a very pleasant one by any means, for he has a daily round of changing duties and recreations, spiced with adventures after school hours, and a variety of other things that every student is in bed. He is supposed to be a student of the law, and is atoned from a sound sleep at five o'clock by the morning gun, and the morning horse, and must perform all the duties of a cadet in a few minutes. At half-past five he must have his room in order. He must attend to the Department of the day, and must perform all the duties of a cadet in a few minutes.

Our Boston Correspondence. THE GREAT JUBILEE—WEST STRAITS. THE FAVORITE BARS—THE BALL—THE OFFICIALS TO GILBERT. Multifarious have gathered here this week, to attend the second week's performances at the Coliseum, and all have been delighted with a few musical critics of the New York daily papers. These few fastidious young men, are too wise for their day and generation. On Tuesday last, the musical journal, the Standard, published a long and elaborate review of 50,000 people. The article published that followed almost every piece on the programme, showed that the music had kindled an enthusiasm which was as unanimous as it was unqualified.

Persevere and Prosper. AN ARABIAN TALE, BY JOHN G. WALKER. "To the manly will there's never a lack," Said a simple Arab, looking at a Turk, "And I'm going to try this way."

Fish's Resting Place. In all the town of Brestleboro, says a correspondent, there is no more beautiful spot than the place where Col. Fisk is buried. The village cemetery is on the top of a hill, sloping down on one side to the Concord, on the other calculating all the glories of sunset, as across the churchyard grass the rays of the setting sun linger longest. The lot which Col. Fisk purchased only a few months before his death, is one of the pleasantest in the cemetery; it overlooks the Concord, and is evenly levelled on the right side of the hill overlooking the river, it is yet neither dark nor gloomy, for the sun strikes through the boughs all day, making flickering shadows on the dirt, soft green of the grass, and touching the flowers that always adorn the spot into new freshness and brightness.

The West Point Cadet. The life of a cadet at the United States Military Academy is not a very pleasant one by any means, for he has a daily round of changing duties and recreations, spiced with adventures after school hours, and a variety of other things that every student is in bed. He is supposed to be a student of the law, and is atoned from a sound sleep at five o'clock by the morning gun, and the morning horse, and must perform all the duties of a cadet in a few minutes. At half-past five he must have his room in order. He must attend to the Department of the day, and must perform all the duties of a cadet in a few minutes.

Our Boston Correspondence. THE GREAT JUBILEE—WEST STRAITS. THE FAVORITE BARS—THE BALL—THE OFFICIALS TO GILBERT. Multifarious have gathered here this week, to attend the second week's performances at the Coliseum, and all have been delighted with a few musical critics of the New York daily papers. These few fastidious young men, are too wise for their day and generation. On Tuesday last, the musical journal, the Standard, published a long and elaborate review of 50,000 people. The article published that followed almost every piece on the programme, showed that the music had kindled an enthusiasm which was as unanimous as it was unqualified.

Persevere and Prosper. AN ARABIAN TALE, BY JOHN G. WALKER. "To the manly will there's never a lack," Said a simple Arab, looking at a Turk, "And I'm going to try this way."

Fish's Resting Place. In all the town of Brestleboro, says a correspondent, there is no more beautiful spot than the place where Col. Fisk is buried. The village cemetery is on the top of a hill, sloping down on one side to the Concord, on the other calculating all the glories of sunset, as across the churchyard grass the rays of the setting sun linger longest. The lot which Col. Fisk purchased only a few months before his death, is one of the pleasantest in the cemetery; it overlooks the Concord, and is evenly levelled on the right side of the hill overlooking the river, it is yet neither dark nor gloomy, for the sun strikes through the boughs all day, making flickering shadows on the dirt, soft green of the grass, and touching the flowers that always adorn the spot into new freshness and brightness.

The West Point Cadet. The life of a cadet at the United States Military Academy is not a very pleasant one by any means, for he has a daily round of changing duties and recreations, spiced with adventures after school hours, and a variety of other things that every student is in bed. He is supposed to be a student of the law, and is atoned from a sound sleep at five o'clock by the morning gun, and the morning horse, and must perform all the duties of a cadet in a few minutes. At half-past five he must have his room in order. He must attend to the Department of the day, and must perform all the duties of a cadet in a few minutes.

Our Boston Correspondence. THE GREAT JUBILEE—WEST STRAITS. THE FAVORITE BARS—THE BALL—THE OFFICIALS TO GILBERT. Multifarious have gathered here this week, to attend the second week's performances at the Coliseum, and all have been delighted with a few musical critics of the New York daily papers. These few fastidious young men, are too wise for their day and generation. On Tuesday last, the musical journal, the Standard, published a long and elaborate review of 50,000 people. The article published that followed almost every piece on the programme, showed that the music had kindled an enthusiasm which was as unanimous as it was unqualified.

Persevere and Prosper. AN ARABIAN TALE, BY JOHN G. WALKER. "To the manly will there's never a lack," Said a simple Arab, looking at a Turk, "And I'm going to try this way."

Fish's Resting Place. In all the town of Brestleboro, says a correspondent, there is no more beautiful spot than the place where Col. Fisk is buried. The village cemetery is on the top of a hill, sloping down on one side to the Concord, on the other calculating all the glories of sunset, as across the churchyard grass the rays of the setting sun linger longest. The lot which Col. Fisk purchased only a few months before his death, is one of the pleasantest in the cemetery; it overlooks the Concord, and is evenly levelled on the right side of the hill overlooking the river, it is yet neither dark nor gloomy, for the sun strikes through the boughs all day, making flickering shadows on the dirt, soft green of the grass, and touching the flowers that always adorn the spot into new freshness and brightness.

The West Point Cadet. The life of a cadet at the United States Military Academy is not a very pleasant one by any means, for he has a daily round of changing duties and recreations, spiced with adventures after school hours, and a variety of other things that every student is in bed. He is supposed to be a student of the law, and is atoned from a sound sleep at five o'clock by the morning gun, and the morning horse, and must perform all the duties of a cadet in a few minutes. At half-past five he must have his room in order. He must attend to the Department of the day, and must perform all the duties of a cadet in a few minutes.

Our Boston Correspondence. THE GREAT JUBILEE—WEST STRAITS. THE FAVORITE BARS—THE BALL—THE OFFICIALS TO GILBERT. Multifarious have gathered here this week, to attend the second week's performances at the Coliseum, and all have been delighted with a few musical critics of the New York daily papers. These few fastidious young men, are too wise for their day and generation. On Tuesday last, the musical journal, the Standard, published a long and elaborate review of 50,000 people. The article published that followed almost every piece on the programme, showed that the music had kindled an enthusiasm which was as unanimous as it was unqualified.