

And yet,
I see him watch Cecilia's winning smile, I see him notice Maud's complexion fair;
My heart with dread he loves all the while,
And yet—
I see him smile to be loved of all, I see him gaze at Milli's fair feet, I follow all their movements with a smile, I see him charmed by my maiden sweet,
My heart with dread he loves all the while,
And yet—
I'm almost sure he loves the best of all.

Mary, the Cook,
It is strange what a world of rumour, What a whispering, watching eye, Hangs about Mary, the cook, Why, it's music to her ear,
And (I'm not ashamed to tell) It's heaven to see her look, She rubs the lamp, well mightadden The stoniest slave of Aladdin—In short, if you want to know sweetest And dearest and magical sweetness, You've only to look at Mary, the cook.

You see, as we're off on a picnic, Some darts will be told to the girls;
So Mary is holding the tea, Ah, who wouldn't be an old kettle To nurse those tumbled ones, And near her I'd look at Charley and Kate, by the beehives, Are opening pickles and peaches;
The others are making a table, While I, the fox in the fable, Sit vainly and look at Mary, the cook.

She's steady 'I'll never let And sober' Well, no—'By that mischievous laugh, —'Why?' 'A fellow can tell That she knows how to ask her, Or guesses it more than half,
Which answers nearly as well, Shall I ask her? (But, ah, what strategy?)
To go to a short way in the country, And to stay there—'I'll be thinking Over that fire—'blushing'

THE TORN CURTAIN.
The date was that of the evil war between the Parliament and King Charles I.
The two sides had taken up arms and were vigorously carrying on the fight. The king's army had been defeated several times, and his adherents taken with arms in their hands were led before judges appointed by Cromwell in every town, to be executed as rebels.
Sir Nicholas Newcastle was one of those judges. He was a man of austere manner, but without harshness; his decision for the new government was well known, and Cromwell had a special esteem for him. His weekly constitution did not allow him to be present at the cause which he thought the just one, but he was looked upon as the most active and able, as well as the most vigorously just manager of the court.
One evening Sir Nicholas was at supper with his family and a few of his friends, when a band of soldiers arrived with a royalist prisoner, they had just succeeded in capturing. It was an officer who, after the rout of Charles' army, had been vainly trying to escape to the coast, and there find means of escape to France. Sir Nicholas ordered his hands to be unbound, and prostrated table to be used near the fire, and he said: "It is my birth-day," said he, "and I wish to finish merrily the supper which I have begun. His execution is to be this evening, with garnish, and at present I would be his host, in an hour I will act as his judge."

The soldiers unbound him, and set down at the table near his prisoner, who did not appear to be much affected by his position and fell to on the provisions before him with as good an appetite as any of them.
Sir Nicholas returned to his place at the head of the large table, and resumed the conversation which had been interrupted by the arrival of the soldier with the prisoner.
"What are you telling you," he continued, "that at the age of 15 I was still so weak and puny that every one scorned my feebleness and took advantage of it to humiliate me? I had a weak stomach, the bad treatment of a step-mother, then that of my school-fellows. Courage in boys is only the consciousness of their strength. My weakness was due to a coward, and far from hardening me, the roughness and harshness to which I was subjected, made me more sensitive to pain. I lived in a continual state of fear, but above all I feared the master's can. Twice I had ordered me to come before him, and I had preserved such an accurate remembrance of the pain, that the very thought of a third infliction made me tremble. I was at Westminster school, as I have already told you. The forms were taught in a large room together, and were separated from another by a curtain, which we were expressly forbidden to touch. One Summer day drowsiness had overcome me, and I fell asleep. My master, who was less than a slight noise starting me out of my nap, I only saved myself from falling off my seat by catching at the curtain, which was fastened to the gown of a man sitting next to me. I saw that I had made in it a tear big enough to see the redness of the wool. The masters turned round at the noise, and at once perceived the damage that had been done. The blame apparently fell on me, and I was ordered next the curtain on the other side; but my confusion soon pointed me out as the culprit, and my master angrily ordered me to come and kneel before him. I got up, staggering like a drunken man; I tried to speak to ask pardon, but I had no words. My master, who was angry, ordered me to kneel under me; a cold perspiration broke out on my face. The instrument of punishment was a wooden rod, and when I heard his one say:
"Do not plead his name. It was my fault!"

"It was the boy on the other side of the curtain who once fell on me. My first impulse was to prevent this unjust punishment by confessing the truth; but I could not summon courage enough to do it, and when the first blow had been given I was ashamed to speak.
When the flogging was over the boy passed near me with bleeding hands, and whispered to me with a smile that I shall never forget:
"Do not meddle with the curtain again, youngster. The came there." "I sank down in a fit of sobbing, and they had to send me to bed. I was Sins that day I have been disgusted with my cowardice, and have done all I can to overcome it. I hope I have not been altogether wrong in what I have said."
"And do you know this generous fellow?" asked one of his guests. "He was you ever seen him again?" "He was not in any form and left the school soon afterward. Ah! God knows that I have often wished to see him. I have not known who suffered so much for me, and I would give years of my life to be able to shake hands with him at my table."

At that moment a glass was held out toward Sir Nicholas, who lifted his eyes in astonishment. It was the royalist prisoner, who languishingly proffered a toast:
"To the memory of the torn curtain of Westminster! But upon my word, Sir Nicholas, I believe—something about me." "The show-white lies, or 'The showies white'—I don't recollect which, and it's all the same!"

and not at once declaring myself to blame.
"You are right; now I remember! but in what a situation! in what a service!" And when the judge, who was sitting in the service of my king, Sir Nicholas, "I was not going to be the first of my family who had played the traitor.
My father has already done that, and I expect no better fate. Never mind, I only ask one thing: 'God save the king!'"
With these words the royalist returned to his place among the soldiers, and continued his report.
The next night after having given orders that the prisoner was to be well treated, he left home without saying where he was going, and was gone three days. On the fourth day he arrived, and ordered the royalist officer to be brought before him.
"I am going to settle my affair at length," he said coolly. "It is time to do so, were it only for humanity's sake. They treat me so well at your house, and such attention, that I have begun to like the life. I shall come to settle with you to retain my life."

"My friend," said the judge, with a grave face, but in a voice trembling with emotion, "I have not said to you, 'Do not meddle with the curtain, youngster,' for the cure I say you have been receiving, but in my heart I do not take up arms against the Parliament, for Cromwell is not easy to deal with."

General Festivities.
I can imagine what is going on in Honolulu now, says a letter writer, during this month of mourning, for I was in Honolulu, for twenty years ago, died, David Kalakaua (a chief), Commander-in-Chief of the Household Troops (how is that, for a title?) is no more. He was a man of great talents, closed entrance to the "palace" grounds, keeping out all whites but officers of State; and when, at the death of his father, he was crowned and dancing and walking and carrying on in the same old-fashioned fashion that obtained here before the war, he was crowned and three blocks from the wooden two-story palace when Victoria was being landed, and for thirty nights in succession he had his coronation. He was crowned all that time the Christianized but morally unclean Princess lay in state in the palace. I got into the grounds one night and saw the coronation. I saw naked savages of both sexes beating their dismal tom-toms, and wailing and entering in the weird gas of the "Hula-hula," and the coronation. I saw a band of women wailing and jiggered their plaint bodies through the intricate and intricate of the coronation. I saw the hula-hula, they chanted an accompaniment in native words. I asked the cause of this, and he said that the
