As a matter of course they partook copiously of the critter, and things became lively, and a row, such as astonished the "oldest inhabitant" of Millheim, followed. The Irish had a brisk time in pounding each other, and several of their number lay upon the sidewalks terribly battered and pounded. Sheriff Musser's hotel, as we are informed, was taken in complete possession by the children of the great patron saint of old Ireland. The row was altogether confined to the Irish, none of the citizens, we are pleased to learn, got mixed up in any of the fights, having wisely feft the sons of the green isle to celebrate St. Patrick's day in 1 the mountains, to thenumber of some 50, gathered at Millheim to celebrate St. Patrick's day in 1 the mountains, to thenumber of some 50, gathered at Millheim to celebrate is blowever, and their doing so? their own way. -A SINGULAR FATAL AFFRAY.-We learn that en Thursday, Feb. 6th, Mr. James Lingle, of Goshen twp., while at Shawsville, met three or four men who had been drinking, and they tried to persuade him to take some liquor, which he refused to do, whereupon they undertook to force him to drink. Mr. Lingle resisted their efforts, and in doing so he knocked one down, when a second one of the party, a man named Wallace, struck him a slight blow on the mouth. Thus ended the affray, and all parties went to their homes without having sustained any serious damage. A day or two after the occurrence above related, Mr. Lingle's lip and face became inflamed, ervsipelas ensued, and came inflamed, erysipelas ensued, and continued to get worse until Saturday, the 15th, when he died from its effects. Such, we are informed, are the facts in the case. This is certainly one of the most singular fatal occurrences that it has ever befallen our lot to record. Mr. Lingle was a large, robust, healthy person, and hence it seems exceedingly strange that so slight an injury should end his life. But the ways of Providence are beyond the comprehension of man, and this instance again illustrates the fact, "that in the midst of life we are in death."—Osceola Reveille.
