And in most stock pieces I know where the points ought to be; and if a novice fails to make 'em—which he invariably do—I'm disgusted in proportion. I've served under Edmund Kean, William Macready, and all the stars since. I once fell out with Mr. Macready, because I couldn't remember where to stand at a certain cue. He was rewrestigned by the state of the color where to stand at a certain cue. He was very particular about his situations; and one day, at rehearsal, I couldn't state of fever, and must be kept very think where I ought to be, and I made the same mistake so often that I got flustered; I was young at the time and rather sudden; so when Mr. Macready, almost out of patience, says—"Stand here, you dolt!" pointing to a place on the stage, I takes a piece of chalk out of my pocket and makes a X just where he wanted me to be; and there I stood looking as cool as a railway clerk, all —not a ha penny—and found the botthe while I was as frightened as a amatles besides!

woman, and I got her an engagement at our theatre. Of course she feel in love—girls always do at that age, seventeen,—with as rising a young fellow as I wished to see. I was proud of Rose, and I was glad it turned out so; and what's more, he wasn't ashamed of me, although I was only a super, which made me proud of him too. He was very jealous of Rose, and wanted to take her off the stage and marry her at once; but I objected on the score of age. I asked him to wait a year, till she was a little older, and he took my advice—rather unwillingly, I suspects, if his face was to be believed; but he didn't say so, for he always gave way to me, because I knew what was better than he did.

In rever went near the public then but hurried home every night as soon as the performance was over, a-hoping always as she'd be better, and would know me again; but she never did till about an hour before it come. It was a Sunday night, at church that my little darling was carried up to Heaven on the sound of the bells, as it died away on the breeze. I was a sitting quiet at the window, melancholy-like, a-keeping my eye on Rose to see as she didn't want nothing, and, somehow, the night my poor wife died eame into my mind, and I couldn't get rid of the thought nohow.
