Zalez had disappeared in a revolutionary vortex forever. Lady-day quarter passed, bills were paid, Tito, waxing shabbier and shabbier, and still wondering why his father never wrote to him, got up every morning with a marvelous confidence in his day was out. Tito scarcely took into bills; and Mr. Price was too tender-hearted a man to show his dissatisfac-tion to the child himself. Mr. Price was puzzled what to do with him, or how long he was to allow this to last; and he looked more thoughtfully at the small enigma every day, and could Mr. Price went to London, to the old town address of Col. Zalez, and made fled at all points. Tito's father had paid fied at all points. The slatter had paid his bill and disappeared about nine months since, without leaving a clue to his whereabout. A telegram from abroad had led to his sudden departure, it was elicited, and Col. Zalez, packing up his boxes and putting on his boots, probably more down at heel than ever, had departed on his mission, whatever it was, to a foreign State, wherever that might be.

Tito became so very shabby after Lady day that the master found ex-cuses to leave him at home, when the boys went out for their airings or their cricket-matches; and finally one of our boys spoke positively to a few high words which he had heard exchanged between Mr. and Mrs. Price one even-ing with reference to the former's sugon that he thought he should risk

The high words, at all events, ended in the suit of clothes being provided for poor Tito, who accompanied us in our walks again, and looked for the tall, sun-burned gray mustached man at the corner of every street we passed.
