The Death of Senator Sumner.

The scenes attending the death of Mr. Sumner were, in many instances, inexpressibly touching. About nine o'clock in the morning it was seen that there was little or no hope of his re-covery. The sad intelligence spread through Washington like wildfire, and the bustle and turmoil of the capital were hushed. Says a correspondent: A more profound quiet was never felt in any community. People in the street spoke to each other in bated breath, and the footfalls were softer on the pavement, Sadness overspread every face, and when the name of Sum ner was mentioned, it was with a sigh The great calamity of Lincoln's death did not seem to stir the popular heart more deeply. People stopped each other on the street to ask for later intelligence; but there was a prevailing presentiment, which had followed Mr mner through most of the day before and which now overhung the city, that this was the great orator's last sickness. then sent him off with two baskets, one to a Mrs. Smith's and the other to a Infantry, under Col.
