there is now. It is true that the crash of 1837 was brought on by inflation and paper money; all financial and industrial crises arise out of expansion of credit, leading to over-production in some branches of industry and general speculation. It might even be said that the crash of 1873 was brought on by proportionately greater speculation and over-production than that of 1837. More of the country's accumulated savings went by the board in 1873 than in 1837, in proportion to our wealth and popula-tion then and now, as we believe and by that much it might be argued that, as our losses are greater, our recovery may be expected to be even slower.

The poor need, however go down to the canal boat for there were no railroads in as our losses are greater, our recovery may be expected to be even slower.

But those who argue thus would forget that we have now immense resources and means toward rapid recovery which were not in existence in 1837-42. The means of exchange have been since then wonderfully increased. Raircoaks, steamships, the telegraph's are now at hand to give us cheap and rapid transportation and facilities for the exchanges of products. Also the means for the reation of valuable products have been corrected as the french of the products have been corrected as the french of the street, but they were extended as the fire in the products.
