HEART-BREAK

ET HEINE. If little flowers knew it. The sorrow on my heart. Their tears with mine would rue it. And less would be the smart

If nightingales could know it, My trouble and my grief. They would sing me to undo it

A musical relief. The golden stars and tender. If they could know my pain.

Would step from out their splendor. To bring me peace again.

They know it by no token One only knows-and she Herself it is bas broken

And torn my heart from me.

Getting A Lift.

"And wha kens, Marjory, by that ne somebody may gie us a lift, Marjory shook her pretty head. She had not just now her lover's hopeful-ness; but she smiled, as she always did, at his Scotch accent, glancing up arch-y, and the shake of the head was not very discouraging.

The two were standing before that nossy little cottage at the corner of the ane, just where the sweeping shadows Inne, just where the sweeping shadows of the great elm flickered over it. This cottage was Marjory's day-dream—a tiny, cozy, flower-clad day-dream, with a good substantial wall and a vine-cov-ered hedge about it. The question arose how the cable was to be restored to its proper place. The inspector invoked the aid of a rat catcher, and, provided with a large rat, a ferret, and a ball of string wound on the Morse paper drug, he repaired to the opening of the tube. The flash boxes were opened, and the rat, with one end of the string attached to his body, was put into the pipe. He and the same operation was com-menced with the other; but the rat stopped short a few yards from the pipe, and boldly awaited the approach of the ferret. as this, now— Marjory, sitting by his side, blushed as she rode along, seeing all the homely familiar things from a grand distance, and fancying herself a lady riding into town with a gay gallant beside her. "What is the prettiest place here-about?" asked the squire, rousing from his reverle. And Marjory toid him of the little cottage under the elm-that was the prettiest place of all. So they rode along till they came in sight of the grand houses on the hill—a big brown houses, with a great carriage way and a row of tall poplars. Near the south gate stood the conservatory and hothouses. The glass doors were open. The scent of rare exotics floated on the air, mingled with the earthy odor of the garden mould. The sun was set all speed, shouting and splashing the garden mould. The sun was setting behind the poplars, flushing everything with rose-color. "Pretter than this?" asked the squire. How would you like to live here?" Ah, to live in a place like this, with a gardener to work for you, and to bow to the dust as he brought you a bouquet of those wonderful flowers! The ques-tion seems to have been explained by Prof. Ritthausen, who has examined samples of peas of these different char-acters, and has found that the hard boil-ing peas contain a large excess of potsah, and sulphate of potsah, but a large de-ficiency of phosphoric acid as compared with the soft boiling peas. It was also discovered that the boiling of soft boilcentration, and will last an indefinite time. It melts at about one hundred and twenty degrees Cen., and may be re-employed without loss of any of its qualities, whenever it is desirable to change the form of an apparatus, by melting at a general heat, and operatmelting at a general heat, and operat-ing as with asphalte. At one hundred and ten degrees, it becomes as hard as stone, and therefore preserves its so-lidity in boiling water. Slabs of zeio-delite may be joined by introdu-cing between some of them paste heated to two hundred degrees, which will melt the edges of the slabs, and when the whole becomes cold it will present one uniform piece. discovered that the boiling of soft boil-
