

FOR THE YOUNG PEOPLE.

Miss Maudie says to her Grandmother's... One day the old lady was out I presume...

And in "rummaging round," found an old-fashioned bonnet... Which she no sooner saw than she pounced...

And, winking like a cat on the same... straight upon it. "Well," she cried, as she bowed in a matronly...

"If you're not just the picture of Grandmother... Now let's see!" she went on—"Yes, that's just what I'll do...

I will put on her gown and her spectacles too... I'll creep down the stairway as still as a mouse...

And sit down in her chair, just inside of the house... So that grandfather, when he came back...

Will not have the remotest idea as to... But will think it is grand. O, won't I be fun!

He jokes me all the time, and now I'll say him... So she dressed herself up in a new black silk...

And, going out on the porch, she, with infinite... care. Establishing herself in her grandmother's...

chair—"Oh, I'm certain, had anyone happened that way... And they would never have dreamed 'twas not...

Why, even old Tabby, the family cat... Ran away without waiting for her bar my "cat!"

Not long after, Miss Maudie Petekin Paul... Came lazily sauntering out through the...

And, seeing his grandmother's coat on a chair... With his hat and cane by it, he thought, "I declare!

Now I'll play a trick on my grandmother... She is out on the porch, fast asleep. I dare say...

It just dawns myself up in his things, and go out... So she quickly put on both the coat and the hat...

And he looked very funny—I'll answer for that... Why, the big bow-tie almost hid him from sight...

And, pompously thumping his cane on the door... He gave a loud "Hum" as he went out on the porch...

And, advanced, with his face turned away, to... meet her. Last night, at a glance, he was but an imperfect stranger. "Ah!" he said, very gruffly, "Good morning, my dear... I thought it likely I'd find you out here...
