At present the incon-venient landing stage has been aban-doned.".Pleuro-pneumonia is spreadingamong the cattle in North and EastYorkshire.A fellow by name of Boyton has in-vented a suit by which a person canfloat in the water like cork. Boyton,two weeks ago entered the Alleghenyriver at Oil City, and floated down toPittsburg, amid the ice and drift. AtPittsburg his arrival was witnessed bythousands who lined the shore. Henow contemplates floating from Cincin-nati to New Orleans. A dispatch fromPittsburg, 17, says that, after havingrested for several days and entirely re-covered from the uncomfortable effectsof his terrible voyage down the Alle-gheny River Captain Paul Boyton an-nounces his intention of again enteringthe water at the junction of the Monon-gabela and the former stream, the pointwhere he left it on his arrival here, andof continuing his voyage down the OhioRiver. His ultimate destination is atpresent undecided, but the hardy voya-ger says he will float to New Orleans,and perhaps to the Gulf of Mexico, un-less the malarial fevers, which frequent-ly prevail along the Lower Mississippi,should prevent him. To make thisjourney he will have to pass through in-numerable eddies and rapids and shootthe great falls at Louisville. Nothingdaunted, however, he is making prepar-tions for the trip, and intends to starton Thursday next. People along thewhole line of the river are deeply inter-ested in the proposed feat, and manyexpress the opinion that Boyton cannever reach New Orleans alive. On Wednesday afternoon he will try the waterof the Monongahela just above Brad-docks. A point about twelve miles fromthe Ohio is now full of floating ice, butit is expected that it will thin out beforethe time fixed for the start. | <ul> <li>been made that any nomination on the executive calendar to which objection should be made should be passed without debate. Either over this or some collatteral question an issue of veracity arose. Conkling, full of anger, felt himself assailed by an Administration Senator, and poured out the vials of his wrath confining bis language, however, within parliamentary requirements. Senators say his abuse of Burnside was severe. The latter arose and said with vehemence: "The Senator is guilty of duplicity." Mr. Conkling reitreated his statement in a provokingly cool way, whereupon General Burnside said, "The Senator lies." Mr. Hoar, who was the presiding officer in the absence of the Vice-President, called General Burnside to order and command him to take his seat. For a moment everything was drowned by the gavel, and accounts differ as to what General Burnside did say the first time, but there is a concurrence of opinion that he did tell Mr. Conkling that the latter was guilty of duplicity. At the end of the confusion the Senate of the Senators went to Mr. Blaine's reception, where General Burnside appeared quite unruffled.</li> <li>The Greenback congressmen, to the number of twelve, held a caucus the other day and unanimously resolved to maintain their party organization in the next congress. But the Democrats are determinedthat it shall never come to a vote. If theresolution is reported the programme isfor Butler at once to take the fillow-ed by Morgan, of Alabama, who pledgeshimself for two more, and Eaton, ofConnecticut, though an old man, willoccupy the floor for a day.
