The Safeguard.

A baby crept to his father's knes, And was lifted up and hulled to rest, This he bine eyes closed, so tired was ha, And his liftle head fell peacefully At ease on the ready shouldor there, While the baby hand, so soft and fair, Lay like a shield on his father's breast.

Of old 'twas said that when men drew near To fierce temptation or deadly strife, And lost their way in a maze of fear. Or periled their souls for worldly gear, By a way unknown an angel hand Wonld lead them out of the dange Would lead them out of the dangerous land, Into the light of a nobler life.

The story is true for the world to-day We see no white-robed angels mild; But out of the dark and perilous way Where men and women forget to pray-Into the peace of a purer land They are led by a gentle, shielding hand, The hand of a little helpless child. - Elizabeth W. Lived and toiled together. Full many a weird and pleasing tale Was told the boy, of sea and sail. Of floating berg and northern gale Of clear and cloudy weather.

Adown the west the king of day Was hastening through the gates away, In all his golden bright array, When home returned the skipper At evening, strolling on the sand, He told the boy of many a land, And slowly traced with his brawny hand The cross and the starry dipper.

'Twas midnight, and, unfit for rets The boy stole softly from his nest To watch the moon in clouds of the west Play hide and seek with the water. To laugh at the wind in its wild, wild race, And again the stars of the heavens to trace Ect he thought that the dipper was out o
