

"I am an Husbandman,"
 "The sun's in the middle,
 And appears in the middle,
 And swags in space,
 Hold forever in place,
 In the Zodiac grid or band."

Let the food of man win
 From her stomach to her brain,
 Than her soul, unwilling arms,
 'Mid all the pomp of war and arms,
 Her slaughter'd sons to lay.

Better the food of man win
 From her stomach to her brain,
 Than her soul, unwilling arms,
 'Mid all the pomp of war and arms,
 Her slaughter'd sons to lay.

Over the wires,
 Like a comet of distant chime,
 The message gleefully singing:
 Over the telegraph wires,
 And what are the glad voices humming
 Of their crotchets in the sunlight away?
 "I am coming, coming, coming—I am coming home to-day!"

It was a clear, warm morning and every one was in such a glow of good spirits. "I think we were all glad to see you," said the girls, with a look that was quite new to them.

That thing's been done just once before in my lifetime, but it was a boy that did it.
 There's a saying, 'mong' 'em as 'I think it was once done by a boy, and the New York Commercial Advertiser says it was done by a boy named Hoge, a well-known boy and livery man, after receiving means to ship the product without breaking the custom.
