When the bird arrives at the hollow tree or other place where the honey is deposited, it hovers over the spot, points at the deposit with its bill, and perches on a neighboring bush or tree to await its share of the plunder. This is the usual termination of the ad-venture. But sometimes the honey-bird seems to be actuated by a love of mischief, and then instead of leading the traveler to a bee's nest, it conducts him to the lair of some wild beast, and then flies away with a twittering which

The Australian Forest. Morning and evening the Australian forest is awake; at noon it is asleep. No greater contrast can be imagined than between the morning hours and those at midday. In the former the very flowers seem to possess an active exist-ence. Myriads of such, larger and more brilliant than those under English skies, load the air with the sweetest scents; magnificent tree-ferns wave their fronds of branches in the light breeze; on old stumps of trees great green and yellow lizards lie watching tor their prey; the magpie throws her voice from the wattles, and possibly the lyre-bird, in the denser scrub; and in the light breeze; on old stumps of trees great rots, rosellas, cockatoos, butcher-birds, love-birds, etc., are screaming and dart for their prey; the brase scrub; and in the ing to and fro. But by-and-bye their tense heat will silence all these, and nothing will be heard but the chirr of the grasshopper and the shrill sound signin there is a revival of life, but not so coheerful a description.
