The same suggish ignorance which makes the Russian "mujik" proof against the whispers of disaffection, renders him abselutely useless to the political life of his country. What is wanted is a reasoning, not a reasonless, obedience. Russia's safety lies in the creation of a class of practical and well-to-do men of business, for whom order implies prosperity, and disorder absolute ruin. The existence of such a class in France made the commotion of 1830 short and comparatively bloodless, rendered absortive the attempted outbreak of 1832, and tided over the great political crisis of 1878-9 without any outbreak at all; and theremedy which has succeeded in Parismay be trusted not to fail in St. Petersburg.

James Redpath, the New York Tribune correspondent in Ireland, reports that hundreds of families have pawned or sold their clothing and household effects to get food, and have nothing of their own except, as the frequent saying is, "the daylight, the water, and a house full of hungry children." The present distress is ascribed to four causes—wet scasons, deeline in the value of stock and produce, the land system, and the credit system which has grown up in the past thirty years.

At a meeting of the Irish land league in Dublin a letter from Mr. Charles Parnell was read, declaring that the general verdict of American opinion throughout the United States is overwhelmingly in favor of a radical change in the Irish land system.

A notable sale of paintings and other art treasures belonging to Prince Demidoff, an eccentric Russian nobleman, has just taken place in Paris. The sale of paintings by old Flemish and Dutch masters lasted three days, and in many instances small fortunes were paid for single pictures. The total price received for them was $537,365, the highest sum paid for a single painting, being $42,000 for Hobbema's landscape, called "The Windmill." The next highest price paid was $530,000 for Antony Van Toyck's "Portrait of Anne Cavendish, Lady Rich."

The refusal of the French government to give up one Hartman, charged with assisting in the attempt to assassinate the czar at Moscow, has caused much disappointment in Russis, and a rupture of diplomatic relations between the two countries is threatened. From the text of an editorial in the London Times concerning the United States and the interoceanic canal it appears that British public opinion is much exercised by the firm position taken by the American government. The Times attacks the Monroe doctrine and asserts that the United States cought to make up its mind either to let M. de Lesseps build the canal or to charge itself with the task. The arrival of Mr. Paroell, the Irish land agitator, in Queenstown from his trip to the United States, was made the occasion of a demonstration in his honor.
