About this time the menagerie became an American institution. The "moral" is curious to note what men will do there was a demand for Asiatic-African nanimals. For years Hamburg, in Germany, had been a sort of depot at which such naimals were gathered by incoming ships from the tropics. Reiche conceived this idea of establishing a house there, and supplying it steadily with all sorts of boasts, to be captured by bands of hunters, working under his direction in the deserts and jungles. Up to that time the supply at Hamburg had been easual, depending on what sailors or ship captains might bring over. Mr. Reiche went into Africa and Asia, and found that his best method was to depend upon native hunters, acting under order of their shekkh and directed by a few white men of courage and address. His system was soon so organized that his bests the world. It was supplied constantly with all sorts of captures, from they antelopes up to elephants, running through all the gamut from leoperd to rhinoeeros. From Hamburg he now supplies the most of the parks and gardens of Europe, and ships heavily to America. He imports every wild animal sold in this country, and keeps a "large and assorted stock on hand." Nine-tenths of the animals in Central park, New York, and a large proportion of those in other parks are his property.

Nine-tenths of the animals in Central park, New York, and a large proportion of those in other parks are his property. When he receives a consignment of loss or hispopotami, or a few rhinocerl and giraffes are billed to him, he pluces them are sored. It was trading on the distress-the aviraly in Central park, where they await a purchaser. He keeps in his sore only a description of the smaller animals—and even the aviraly in Central park is stocked with his birds. He considers twenty lions a good average stock, with probabily as many tigers, a dozen elephants, four rhinoceri (or rhinoceri one stone noise. Fortunes have been made and lost in indigo speculations; and, for that matter, this article has far more commercial importance than might at first be imagined. Then a few price of animals varies with the demand. You must get a man that wants a beast before you can get any price for him—then the price depends upon how much he wants him.

"You see," said Mr. Reiche, smiling, "you wouldn't give $10 for that lion there (for we had now dritted to Central park) for your own use, and yet he is worth $2,500."

A good companionable tiger can be bought for $1,200, and a nice leopard is worth about $4.00. Monkeys sell in the bunch by the dozen at about $30 cach, and a rhinoceros brings about $3,000. A giraffe is very expensive and very delicate, and a zebra, striped up to the regulation of ninety-nine and one is worth shout $1,000. Giraffes die of indigestion, the rhinoceros, despite his heavy overcoat, is a frequent victim of comsumption, and the monkey dies of emotional languor.

The depot for sea lions is San Francisco, where a man named Mulett superintends. They are taken on the south California coast, and bring about $4.00.

They are kept in deep caves that are damp and sunless, or in dens set in ice and with luze blocks of ice dripping from the top. The point at which Mr Reiche buys them is Hamburg, very few Curiosities of Speculation.

It is curious to note what men will do to make money. Some months ago to make money.
