Fame.

Fame is on the mountain's crest. Steep is the ascent; Unless we climb the mountain's height Can we ever be content? But there's another mountain, A loftier summit still, Whose apex, high above the clouds, Leaves fame upon a hill,

Many reach the hilltop, But few the mountain's crost Fame, citadel of worldly things, But not angelic rest. There's many a sparkling fountain Of little good or ill; But then, the turbid waters-'Tis' they that feed the mill.
