Congress convenes next winter.

Arthur, the Vice President, is mad be cause Garfield-is President. Arthur is Vice President.

Let both resign for spite. Gen, James, the Postmaster General, is doing good work in rooting out the st r-route contracts, thereby already having saved to the country several hundred thousand dollars. If these reforms were practiced in every department of the government, the expense for running Uncle Sam's farm would be only one half what they have been. That things can be done for less money is shown by Mr. James; it is also proven in another respect by the Philad. Branch, which has put down the price of ready-made clothing to one half the pricest hat prevailed before the advent of the Philad. Branch, and the great saving in the department of clothing hall. With the great saving in the open fine contracts, and Gen'l James, manager of the post-office department, and cen'l James, manager of the Philad. Branch, and Gen'l James, manager of the post-office department, the greatest reformers git the times. Gen. James, the Postmaster Gener-
