There found them side by side, And voice of the fair and brave Rose mingling thence in mirth : And sweetly floated o'er the wave

The melodies of earth, Moonlight on that lone Indian main Cloudless and lovely slept; While dancing step and festive strain

Each deck in triumph swept. And hands were link'd, and answering eyes With kindly meaning shone;

Oh! brief and passing sympathies, Like leaves together blown! A little while such joy was cast Over the deep's repose,

Till the loud singing winds at last And proudly, freely on their way

In calm or storm, by rock or bay, Never to blend in victory's cheer.

To aid in hours of wee; And thus bright spirits mingle here, Such ties are form'd below !

-Grace's jesting wish for the four-leaved shamrock. Poor Gerald was but half-witted; his brain had been injured by a fall in babyhood, and had never properly developed. He was still a child in mind, with all a child's belief in the marvelous—a belief which Grace was chary of discouraging, from an instinctive feeling that his imaginations were his highest gift, which, once weakened or destroyed, would never be replaced by reasoning powers. She was very fond of him, and devoted much placed by reasoning powers. She was very fond of him, and devoted much time and trouble to the work of training him, and drawing out what little intellect he possessed; while he, on his part, repaid her care with a passionate devotion, obeying her about like her shadow. He was also fond of Laurence, a ride on whose horse constituted his greatest pleasure; and, though quite unconscious of the reason, he understood, in his own dim way, that Laurence's uncle was angry, and that Grace was grieved. Anger was a very terrible thing to poor Gerald, who dreaded somewhat retarded poor Gerald's fat and Laurence was thus enabled to seize him just as he was being drawn under
