As long as people wrote on tables covered with wax they were obliged to use a style or bodkin, made of bone, metal, or some other hard substance; but when they began to write with colored liquids they used a reed; after which quills and feathers (plumes as is sometimes said) came into fashion, these finally giving way to metals steel, not only from its adaptability, but from its cheapness, being the speciality for this purpose.

The earliest pens, such as were used for writing on paper us with a fluid, appear to have been made of reeds. Most of the manufactured goose quills were from the Netherlands, Germany, Russia and Poland. Before the general introduction of metallic pens, as many as 27,000,000 of quills had been received in Great Britain from St. Petersburg in a single year. Some idea of the number of geese required to keep up such a supply may be judged from the fact that each wing produces about five good quills, and that by careful management a goose may afford ten quills during a year.

While quill pens were in vogue the occupation of a pen cutter or maker was one of considerable importance; not one in five of those who used pens could make one, and scarcely half a century has elapsed since a certain house in Shoe lane, London, disposed of over six million quill pens per annum. A comical matter has been made public in Montreal by some legal proceeding. A retired major of the British atmy had four daughters who moved in good society in that city. They all entered into correspondence with a retired elergyman of London, whose mind was somewhat enfeebled, but who enjoyed an income of $15,000. The letters became sentimental all round, and at length the man proposed marriage. But which of the four should be take? He had never seen any of them, and it keep it open. Mr. MacVeagh said that there was no iaw or custom for the attorney-general to appear in criminal trials, and said he had been told so miss quoted the case of Aaron Burr, and the attorney-general replied that that was a trial for treason. "Yes," the President is reported to have said, "and this is a trial for murdering the chief magistrate of the nation, and to my mind it is the positive duty of the attorneygeneral to take charge of the case." Mr. Mac-Veagh then reiterated that the law never contemplated that as any part of his duty. Finally, the President said he was determined that the government should have able counsel, and he would himself direct, if Mr. MacVeagh declined to do so, that Judge John K. The annual report of the pension bureau has been submitted by Commissioner Dudley to the secretary of the interior recapitulating the operations of the late fiscal year. It shows that on the 30th of June 1881, there were 268,830 pensioners, classified as follows: Army invalids, 153,025; army widows, minor children and dependent relatives, 76,683; navy invalids, 2,187, navy widows, otd., 2,005; survivors of the war of 1812, 8,895; widows of the war of 1812, 26,-029. Twenty-eight thousand seven hundred and forty pensioners were added to the roll during the year, and 10,712 were dropped, leaving a net increase of 18,028. At the close of the year the annual pensions aversged $107, and the aggregate annual value of all pensions was $28,769,907. The annual disbursements of the office, however, largely exceed this sum. For instance, the total amount paid for pensions during the year (exclusive of certain arrears is claims allowed prior to January 23, 1879) was $49,723,147, the difference being accounted for by arrears of pensions or "accrued pensions," covering periods dating back to the discharge in each case of a soldier still living, and to the soldiers' deaths in the claims of widows on minor children. The amount paid out during the year as "first payments" to new persioner was $23,028,177.
