

Royalty itself does not escape suspicion where Nihilism is concerned and the members of the Russian Imperial family are under surveillance. The Garman wife of the Grand Duke Vladimir, discovered not long ago, that she had written to her family, and in which it said that she complained of the dullness and insecurity of life at the Russian Court, had been opened by her own personal aid-de-camp, before delivery to the post. The angry Grand Duchess complained to the Emperor; but, to her astonishment, met with no sympathy from him. Still more enraged, she delivered her emphatic decision that, if the offender was not immediately dismissed, she would leave the place. The aid-de-camp was dismissed, but only to receive a much more lucrative appointment.

Among the Zuni Indians, who have recently come to the front by coming East for ocean water, there is said to be a social custom that might be worth adopting in more civilized circles. In Zuni land the houses belong to the women instead of the men, so a man can marry without first being obliged to buy or hire a house; marrying men are therefore abundant among the Zunis. On the other hand, a man who marries can only occupy his wife's house during good behavior, the wife having always the right to put an unsatisfactory husband out of doors. This is a privilege that would raise many American wives from abject slavery to the rank of equal partner in the conjugal firm. But, whether for husband or wife, the Zuni plan is an advantageous one; it encourages early marriages, assures every woman of a home, so that she need not merely marry to get one, and it keeps husbands in order, for almost every man will behave himself if by so doing he can avoid the onerous duty of paying house rent.
