Some of the facts in railroad transportation are extremely puzzling. A Boston paper mentions this case of freight its crimination: The lowest rate for sarrying California wool from San Francisco to Boston is 2% cents a pound, but he same railroads that make this charge conferent where the strength of the same railroads that make this charge conferent where a strength of the same railroads that make this charge that the same railroads that the cisco to Boston is 2% cents a pound, but the same railroads that make this charge contract to bring Australian wool ail the way from Australia to San Francisco by sea, 7,000 miles, and by rail from San Francisco to Boston, 3,000 miles, for 2 cents a pound. It seems that the further a thing has to be carried the less the carriage costs. If the rule were extended further, it might be found that wool could be shipped out the front door of a Boston warehouse, carried round the world, and brought to the back door of the Boston warehouse for nothing.
