who refused to vote on this motion. The answer is obvious. A bare majority of one is a quorum of the House. The republicans themselves have a good working majority, and can at any time make a quorum without Democratic aid if they will only atlend to their business. The failure of the Republicans to get at the Dibbie case, and carry out their plan for unseating him, was owing to the fact that thirty five of their members were not present; and on scouring the Capitol and the city it was ascertained that they were nearly all absent from Washington. After abusing the Democrats for not coming to their rescue, the Republicans are now going to call home their wandering members and make another attempt to get rid of Dibble.
