FUNDAMENTAL DIFFERENCES.

The history of the political parties in the United States is full of interest for the calm reflection of every citizen.

When the union of the States was formed by the adoption of the federal constitution, the powers of the government conferred upon the National Legislature, by that instrument, and those reserved to the States and people, naturally awakened inquiry, and the question of a loose or strict construction of the Constitution immediately divided the political opinion and sentiments of the Nation.

Those who believed in a loose, or as it was termed, a liberal construction of the Constitution, were denominated Federalists, and the friends of a strict construction of the Constitution were known as Republicans, and afterwards as Democrats.

Upon the first election of President after the adoption of the Constitution, no issue had yet arisen to divide the public sentiment of the country on the principle of free government, or any measure of governmental policy, entered into the first Presidential election.

General Washington, alone of all the great men who the Revolution had developed, was before the people for the first office in their gift, and he was elected. He was again re-elected in 1792 without a rival.

But during the eight years of Washington's administration numerous questions of Constitutional government arose as they were brought to the view of the people two great parties sprang up, and from that day to the present they have divided the political sentiment of the people and will continue to do so.

This River and Harbor bill, excepting the salary grant, is the greatest feat that ever passed Congress, and the Republican party in this as in that is responsible.

It is said that President Arthur would not be certain of the fact that the bill could get the requisite two-thirds to pass before he signed it.

A COMPARISON.

When the last Democratic Congress appropriated some $25,000,000 more for the ordinary expenses of government than had been appropriated for the same purpose by its Democratic predecessors a great outcry was raised by the republicans over the Democratic extravagance.

It is now proposed to spend $1,000,000,000 more for the same purpose than had been appropriated for the same purpose by its Democratic predecessors.

Legislative, executive and judicial... Total, $294,519,869 $226,755,423.

It will be observed that there is an increase of $67,764,446 over the total of 1885.
