The Romance of a Hammer.

Yes, I am, I believe, quite a disinterested person, and fairly well-known for both my courage and modesty. I was boarding in a retired neighborhood in New York, and next door to me confess that in order to add some point to the story I introduced some quite new facts into the description. For instance the street in which the robbery took place was in an entirely different part of the town from ours, and for it I substituted our own immediate.

they display more courage. Let me say to you, in the words of a famous French orator, 'Courage! courage!' At this stage of the proceeding somebody threw a box of caterpillars upon the platform and the meeting broke up in great terror and confusion. He lay in a swoon by the roadside. His helmet was broken; his visor was cracked; his gorget was tarnished with the smoke of battle; his breastplate was indented like a milk can; his hallberd was as dull as a five-cent barber's razor; the lock of his cross-gun was shattered; his arquebuse was shivered; his quiver shook like a canal horse with the heaves; his tabard was in shreds; his ears were off; one eye was gone: his nose was out of plumb, and his jawbone was paralyzed. He had been trying to umpire a baseball game. "Do you think so, darling?" "Yes," said the girl, passing her plate for more pie and smiling archly as she spoke; "kisses and embraces and fair words are very pleasant things—sweet lips and warm arms and loving eyes—but truth and sincerity and loyalty and purity are very much fairer and rarer."
