An Apple Memory.

The white hot dusty road, The field so green and still, The twittering of a bird, The tinkling of a rill. And spreading grandly, wide and free, The shadow of an apple-tree. "Come rest." it seemed to say,

Out of the dust and heat The grasses round my roots Are long and cool and sweet." So free, so gracious was the tree, I took the offer thankfully.

Upon the grass I lay. Green whispering leaves o'erhead; I ate the juicy frui Pale gold, flecked through with red, Then lay in slumber deep and sweet, Till full of rest from head to feet.

Until the sun sank low, And shades of evening fell; Then, rested and refreshed. "My host," I said, "farewell ! Farewell and thanks, oh gracious tree ! Thy guest will long remember thee."

I thought the rustling leaves A pleasant "farewell" sent; ought the loaded boughs Unto my greeting bent. Oh, apple-tree, so kind and free,

May sun and rain long nourish thee ! -Harper's Weekly.
