Rawle's candidacy excites the special antipathy of "Boss" McManes, while it is unpopular with members of the bar, and is a most flagrant example of Cameron direction. It is improbable, however, that he will withdraw. Before his nomination he was known as an Independent Republican with a strong antipathy to the Cameron methods. With that wonderful change which the prospect of an office however dim, makes in some men, Mr. Rawle is now in warm fellowship with Cameron, Cooper and Quay. He has paid his assessment, said to have been $2.000 miles in length and $3.000 to the campaign fund, but will make no speeches.
