The rabbi opened a large book and put his right hand on it. This was a signal for the people to leave him; for he now wished to continue his vocation, which consisted in alternately praying and studying. On the morrow no one went with his box to the country, for it was a festive day. On the eastern side of the synagogue Tobias was busy wrapping the scrolls of the Law in silk and velvet mantles. The large parchments are rolled on a pair of staves, for it is an ancient proscription that the Law of Moses must not be read at synagogue from a printed book, but from parchment scrolls and the strade abroad, because no master would receive him here; and now the guild refuses to admit him and forbids him to carry on his trade!"

"And I hereby give him permission," said the Emperor; and then continued: "I will protect you in all honest dealings, and you shall bear in mind that my name—Joseph—is borrowed from your Old Testament. Herewith I salute your scrolls of the Law," at the same moment baring his head. Cheers, in the midst of which the voices of the children rang loudest, were now heard, and then a carriage came, with two men in brilliant uniforms; it rattled past before one had even time to open his mouth. A murmur of regret arose that the emperor should have passed so proudly and angrily, without taking any notice of them, and they were still disputing whether the one at the left was the emperor when another carriage drew nigh, but quite at a slow pace.
