A LEGAL QUESTION.

The people of Lancaster are excited over the question whether an electric company, which has been authorized by the city to put up lamps, has the right to erect posts to carry its wire in front of the residences of persons who do not wish them there. The legal talent of that city has been interviewed by an Intelligencer reporter, and some attorneys go so far as to deny that the municipality has the right to erect posts, etc., asserting that property owners along a street could even forbid the city to lay sewer pipes along their street. They contend that the mere right of way over the streets is all that the public can claim. There will probably be a sharp contest between the electric company and the unwilling citizens.
