NOTORIOUS FACTS.

There is one fact about the Patrons of Husbandry, otherwise called Grangers, that must not be overlooked. They as a class are keen and observing and make it a point to find out where the best goods can be sold for the least money, now we have some of their most prominent members among our customers, but human nature like, we want all of them to call and examine our immense stock of boots and shoes, just the articles that will please them and marked at prices that will suit them. This invitation we make to all; but we especially call our Granger friends to give us a trial. Should the members of that organization in Pennsylvania have any doubts, let them interview their brethren of Nitany Valley and we feel confident from our dealings with them, they will gladly substantiate all we say. We always feel good when dealing with intelligent people who can appreciate our work. We advertise no prices, but refer you to those brother Grangers in Nitany who within the past week have taken from our boots and shoes, surely this is evidence enough to convince the most skeptical that we sell the best and cheapest boots and shoes in the town or county.

Jno. POWERS & Son.

We are informed that the item about a Mr. Riskey having been severely bitten by Mr. Riskey's dog was greatly exaggerated in these particulars: The person was not a boy, but a man of 28 years; he was not pulled to the ground, and was bitten very slightly by one dog, and was not laid up from the bite, and that Mr. Riskey's dogs are not more vicious than the generality of farm dogs. This correction we make in justice to Mr. John Riskey. Persons should never exaggerate happenings of any kind.

REVELRY BY NIGHT.

Celebrating the Anniversary of a Great and Glorious Day.

Newburg Commemorates the Announcement of the Proclamation of Peace to Washington's Army in a Fitting Manner.

NEWBURG, Oct. 19.—Could the ragged veterans who, here at Newburg, 100 years ago, laid down their swords and muskets and turned from fields of battle to the greener ones of industry, have walked through the crowded, old fashioned streets, they would have been more astonished than Rip Van Winkle when he rubbed his eyes after his long nap. The sun had not yet risen and there was no wind to flutter the banners and streamers which hung above housetops and floated below windows. The streets were quiet, save for the presence of some visitor here and there who could not find even a collar door to rest. On every side as far as the eye could reach hung the banners red and white, green and blue, orange and yellow, black and brown. The Hudson was as calm as a painted stream, and above its waters rose on one side dark wooded mountains and on the other Newburg, dressed and ready for her gala day. In the town the river vessels slowly moved over the hills and the woods in their autumn dress changed from dark to crimson and the brass cannon on the river vessel glistened. The decks became animated and the white caps of the sailors darted hither and thither. A second later and the vessels rocked as valley after valley thundered from their portholes to awake the city on the bluffs and tell the sleepers that the time for jubilation had come. Far up above the bluffs, and up above the houses on the bluffs, in the steeples, men were bending and straightening themselves while they tugged at bell ropes and pealed out the chimes. The concord mingled with the thunder from the ships and the hurrahs of men, who hurried from their beds and at the windows clapped their hands and shouted.

The city had awakened. A few minutes before the streets were silent; now men were rushing up and down, hurrying anywhere and everywhere. The hotels had not half sufficient accommodation, and every bed and lounge in Newburg had been called into requisition. Still there was a deficit, and a large one. Hundreds of thousands of men, who at night drove the drapery of their coaches about them, awoke when the cannon and bells began, to see another bedfellow sitting up beside them rubbing his eyes and cursing the landlord who could not let him have a whole bed to himself. There had only been one bed in this or that room last night, and it had only one sleeper; now there were six pairs of legs under the sheets of this bed, and where the sleeper had placed his boots there was another bed, and the washstand was by the door, and a man cuddled up in a blanket was in its place. To wash this little army were two quarts of water, and to dry it one towel. Many a visitor went down into the streets unshaven and unwashed, but these little conventionalities of life were forgotten in the general glow of humor that prevailed.

Every village around Newburg had sent a horse company to take part in the grand parade, and companies from Hartford, Springfield and all other adjacent points kept continually arriving until the city seemed in a state of siege, for on every side bayonets glistened and the tramp of soldiers reverberated. On the reviewing stand were Gov. Cleveland and staff, Mayor Bourne, of Rhode Island, and staff; Mayor Edson, Roswell P. Flower, Harrison Hill, of New Jersey; Secretary Chandler, the centennial congressional committee, the local committee, Mayor Ward and aldermen and representatives of the press. These men were scarcely seated when Capt. Williams and his policemen came in sight. Following him came the Seventh regiment and veteran corps. They marched in their usual precise manner and their soldierly bearing was liberally applauded. The naval brigade was next, and the showy continental uniforms of the Putnam phalanx, of Hartford, stood appeared and were greeted with applause. The Twenty-third and Thirtieth regiments, of Brooklyn marched finely and attracted considerable attention. Imnumerable lodges of knights of pythias, knights templars and the many orders with their companies by the score, composed the remainder of the procession, which finished passing the reviewing stand at 2:05 o'clock. Then the reviewing stand began to empty itself, and ten minutes afterwards the city was again a wild sea of confusion. Towards afternoon the stream flowed towards Washington's headquarters. At 3 o'clock the Seventh regiment had begun to play, and a few moments later Mayor Ward, of Newburg, called the mighty assemblage to order. Rev. Irenaeus Prime, D. D., offered prayer and Dudley Buck's "We praise Thee, oh God" was sung by 500 voices. Senator Bayard, of Delaware, delivered the oration of the day. He dwelt on Washington's glorious deeds, his patriotism, his disinterestedness and refusal to accept a crown.

During the night the ships in the river were rockets flying in the air, and every house in Newburg gave a private exhibition of fireworks until the whole city was a blaze of light and grandeur. The west shore trains went down to New York crowded with the thousands and only six hours behind the schedule time. Newburg did not rest until long after midnight, and the sound of music and revelry was heard away into the small hours.

Headly's Plurality About 12,648. COLEBURN, Oct. 18.—Returns from sixty-five counties have been received, which give Foster 220,980, out of a total vote of 458,146; Headly 228,985; Schumaker, 6,659; and Jenkins, 1,864. The judicial amendment has received 250,912 votes, being a majority of 21,830. It is thought now that the majority will be about 40,000. The second amendment has 238,574 votes, being 10,499 less than a majority. Secretary Newman thinks that Headly's plurality will be about 12,648. He arrives at this conclusion by estimates placed on the majorities reported to him for each.

An Elopement Ends in Murder. MILWAUKEE, Oct. 18.—New light has been thrown on the horrible wife murder committed by the stranger Esterman or Hoffman at the South Side hotel a few days ago. A letter was received from E. J. Heness, of Mistic Valley, Iowa, stating that the published description of the murderer tallied exactly with that of a man who some weeks ago eloped with his daughter. Further evidence proves that the unfortunate woman was the missing daughter murdered by her betrayer.

Additions to the Public Domain. WASHINGTON, Oct. 19.—Commissioner McFarland, of the land office of the interior department, has made a decision that 51,546 acres of land in Kansas, west of Nettleton, claimed by the Atchinson, Topeka and Santa Fe railroad company shall be restored to public domain and be opened to pre-emption under the homestead law. It is held here that this decision is final under the law, and that the secretary of the interior has no power to revoke or amend it.
