She was afraid to let them meet at her house after that, for fear the threat would be put into execution. When one would call she would wear his engagement ring only, and when the other came she favored him in a similar way. Why sh let such an embarrassing state of affairs continue is best known to herself. She had, however, set December 10 as the happy day, concluding, as a last resource, to accept the fellow who came first, and leave the unfortunate last one to swallow his chagrin the best he could.

Bright and early this morning each gentleman arrived in the city, prepared to wed the object of his affections. It seems that Mr. Hellen was first on the ground, and with the foresight peculiar to persons born north of the Mason and Dixie line, half suspected the true condition of affairs, and determined to be the first in the field. So, procuring a license from the clerk of the common pleas court, he procured a carriage and drove to the residence of his betrothed. Luck was with him. He was the first at the door. married, which will settle the matter," said he. She consented, and without any ado got ercie of the heavenly virtues of patience her hat and entered the carriage and was soon en route to the parson's.

Just as they drove off up came No. 2. Too late the situation dawned upon him. He saw all. His Virginia blood was up and he quickly determined not to be foiled in that manner. A hasty council of war was held with his hack driver, who, stimulated with promises of a handsome reward, allowed he would overtake the couple or break down the turnout.

Jumping to his seat, he lashed his horses, and the terrified animals dashed off down the street, the coach thundering after, arousing the entire neighborhood by the excitement. The first driver, seeing he was pursued, whipped up his horses, but lover No. 2 came on like an avenging Nemesis, and slowly gained on them. Mr. Hellen, in the first carriage, grew apprehensive as the pursuers gained on them, for he remembered that he was the smaller of the two, and had not forgotten his rival's numerous threats. Just as they were passing the western police station a happy thought struck him. He ordered the driver to stop, and entering the station quickly informed the magistrate that he was being pursued a man who had threatened his life. A warrant was issued and he re-entered his carriage and drove off, just as Hammond and his foaming steeds hurried up. The police seized the animals and arrested the unlucky Virginian who, despite his protestations and struggles, was dragged into the station, where he became so violent that he had to be locked up in a cell and a watch was set over him.

In the meanwhile the Pennsylvania man had found a minister and was married. Later in the afternoon a hearing on the charge preferred against Mr. Hammond was beard before Police Magistrate Rhodes. Mr. Hellen withdrew the charge of threatening to kill, but preferred that of threatening assault, whereupon the prisoner was released on security to keep the peace.

Mr. Hammond is greatly affected by this sudden destruction of his hopes. He left home with such happy anticipations that now, as he realizes the bitter truth of his defeat, he is ashamed to return. He is very handsome and much sympathy for him is expressed. His triends are keeping him away from his rival for icar he may do him some iajury.

CINCINNATI, Dec. 15 .- H. V. Lucas, of the Lucas Wainwright club, the prime mover of the new union association, is now creating a stir in baseball circles. He arrived here and held a conference with Justus Thorner, expresident of the Cincinnati club, and leading spirits of the new union team to be organized here. The gentlemen were closeted a long time at the Gibson house, perfecting the arrangements, securing a team of good players to represent Cincinnati. Lucas says there is not the slightest doubt that Cincinnati will be admitted, and that with clubs at St. Louis, Chicago, Philadelphia, Baltimore and Wash-ington, it will be good enough to open up with. Lucas goes to Philadelphia on Monday to attend the association meeting.
