Sunbeams.

A great wag—a dog's tail. A strong case—Sweitzer kasa. A claret punch—A blow of the nose.

A jeweler's advice—Watch your offspring.

What the girls are not apt to object to—Sunday males.

The first cyclone happened in Eden. It was a perfect hurry-Cain.

Many a young girl has for her steady company a young man who is notoriously unsteady.

A lady on Brooklyn Heights calls her cat "Jealousy," because he's a green-eyed monster.

The crop of young doctors this year is unusually large. But what will the harvest be?

Not even a sparrow falls to the ground without being seen, and generally the cat gets it.

When a small boy gets spanked it may be truly said that there is a woman at the bottom of it.

"And he kicked you into street—weren't you mad?" "I did feel considerably put out."

When you see a man scratching himself don't imagine that he is full of personal magnetism. It may merely be old mosquito bites.

The mills of the gods must needs grind, very slowly and grind exceedingly fine when time mills in this country don't make a cent.

One of the most responsible positions in this country is held by a Washington colored woman. She does up Mr. Brewster's shirts.

"No, indeed!" exclaimed Mrs. Podsnap energetically, "I don't believe in the extension of woman's suffrage at all—the suffrage enough now."

Bacon said that an ant in an orchard is a "shrewd thing." Yes, but an ant up the shirt sleeve is much "shrewder" than if it were in an orchard.

Bathing suits more beautifully shocking than ever are announced for the coming season. Something must be done to attract people to the seashore.

"Kiss Me as I Fall Asleep" is the title of the latest song. If this is any seaside, hammock nap, the young man had better not do it. Let her fall asleep without it.

The small boy stands beside the pool, and with his hands the waters cool his feet; he lingers not, nor time does; the weather's hot, and with great haste he peels.

People in love don't feel the heat like ordinary mortals. At least it appears that they don't, for when it is too warm to even drink ice water a girl can stand a great amount of hugging.

"Now, then, Patrick," said the merchant to his new office boy, "suppose you go for the mail." "Yes, sir; an what kind of male wud ye be wantin', sir—Indian male or cat male?"

I don't think the photograph does me justice," said the actress. "Certainly not," replied the artist; "how many actresses would come to me for photographs, do you think, if I did them just so?"

"A propos!"—Sententious old bachelor (in the course of conversation): "As the 'old saw' has it, my dear madam, 'man proposes, but—'"

"Widow (promptly): "Yes; but that's just what he doesn't do!" [Tableau.]

A Harlem girl was asked, this morning, if she had ever been married. "No," she replied, with alacrity; "but I've sued seven gentlemen for breach of promise, and feel as though I were just good and ready to tackle another."

"What do you think of my mustache?" asked a young man of his girl. "Oh, it reminds me of a Western frontier city," was the answer. "In what respect, pray?" "Because the survey is largely enough, but the settlers are straggling!"

Little Nell—"Why, mamma, the sky is just as blue to-day as it was yesterday." Mamma—"Well, why shouldn't it be, pet?" Little Nell—"It rained last night." Mamma—"What of that?" Little Nell—"Didn't you say blue wouldn't wash?"

Nature is guilty of some queer freaks. For instance: Throw a ten-cent dog, that has never seen water, into the river, and it will immediately swim ashore; but when a $50,000 man, whose education in the natorial art has been neglected, falls overboard he incontinently sinks to the bottom.

"You are an excellent cook, Mrs. Jackson," observed Simpul to his landlady; "when he owed two weeks' board."

"Do so like your homemade bread. Have you another plate of it?" "No, Mr. Simpul," replied the lady with cruel dignity. "The baker left less than usual this morning."

Two gentlemen were discussing the health of their neighbor across the way. "He seems to be a great sufferer during nine months of the year," said one.

"Yes," was the reply, "he is never well except during the hot months." "Rheumatic, probably, and the hot water agrees him." "No; his wife is out of town."

"Shall I sing 'When the Robins Nest Again, darling?' she asked, with a sweet smile, as she moved toward the piano. "Yes, love," he replied; then, after a moment's pause, he added: "Allow me to call your attention to the fact that the robins won't nest again till next year." She did not sing, and he doesn't go there any more.

"My dear, look down below," said a grandiose as he stood on the bridge with his wife, and gazing at a tug hauling a long line of barges. "Such is life—the tug is like a man, working and toiling, while the barges, like women, are—"

"I know," interrupted Mrs. G. acridly, "the tug does all the blowing, and the barges bear all the burden."

"Yes, I have left my last place," said Mary. "An' what did you love for?"

"The mistress was too hard-hearted."

"She had no more sensibilities than a ox."

"An' did she abuse you, dearie?"

"Indeed she did that!" "An' what did she do?"

"She put an alarm clock right in my room, an' in the mornings it made such a noise I could not sleep another wink."

FEATS OF TELEGRAPHY.

We have often heard of the wonderful line between this country and Teheran, the capital of Persia, a distance of 3,800 miles, but we scarcely realized the fact that good signals were obtainable through so great a length of wire until recently, when we availed ourselves of an invitation from Mr. W. Andrews, the Managing Director of the Indo-European Telegraph Company, to make a tour of inspection. It was between 7 and 8 on Sunday evening, April 13, when he reached the office.

In the basement of an unpretentious building in Old Broad street, we were shown the Morse printer in connection with the main line from London to Teheran. The courteous clerk in charge of the wire, Mr. Balgove, informed us that we were through to Emden, and with the same ease with which one "wires" from the city to the West End we asked a few questions of the telegraphist in the German town. When we had finished with Emden, we spoke with the same facility to the gentleman on duty at Odessa. This did not satisfy us, and in a few seconds we were through to the Persian capital, Teheran. There were no messages about the time was favorable, and the employees of the various countries seemed anxious to give us an opportunity of testing the capacity of this wonderful line.

T. H. N. (Teheran) said, "Called Kurrachee," and in less than time it takes to write these words we gained the attention of the Indian town. The signals were good, and our speed must have equalled fifteen words a minute. The operator at Kurrachee, when he learned that London was speaking to him, thought it would be a good opportunity to put us through to Agra, and to our astonishment the signals did not fail, and we chatted pleasantly for a few minutes with Mr. Maloom Khan, the clerk on duty. To make this triumph of telegraphy complete, Agra switched us on to another line, and we were soon talking to a native telegraphist at the Indian Government Cable Station, Calcutta. At first the gentlemen "at the end of the wire" could not believe that he was not really in direct communication with the English capital, and he exclaimed, in Morse language, "Are you really London?" Truly, this was a great achievement. Metallic communication without a break from No. 18 Old Broad street, London, to the telegraph office in Calcutta! Seven thousand miles of wire! The signals were excellent, and the speed attained was not less than twelve, perhaps fourteen words, per minute.

DIVORCE UNDER THE ROMANS.

In ancient Rome, under the republic, divorce became more frequent with the decadence of manners. But Caesar, Octavian, Antony, etc., contracted marriage often three, four and five times. Indeed, matters were so bad in Rome that it was considered an honor during the lifetime for a woman to have but one husband. A model epitaph on the grave of a Roman matron set forth that her life was "pious and exemplary, and that she had only one husband." Juvenal tells us how a lady could change her husband eight times in five years; and St. Jerome relates the spectacle could be witnessed at Rome of a woman who died, having had twenty-two husbands. The good father might have added, her last bridegroom was a man who had been divorced twenty-one times; the state paid the expenses of this curious marriage, and when the woman died, she was decreed a public funeral. The conquest of Gaul by the Romans introduced the institution of divorce. Basine quitted the King of Thuringia, for Chilperic, who married her. A Chilperic, King of Soissons, divorced his wife, Andover, because she so forgot court etiquette as to present herself her baby at the baptismal font to be christened. And Charlemagne divorced his Theodora, because she was not a Christian. In Russia, when a husband and wife cannot get on together, they take a napkin, each holding an end, and having broken a cake in two, proceed to a cross-roads, and there, in the presence of some people, tear the napkin to tatters, till the smallest morsel remains in the fingers, incapable of further subdivision. If after this mutual tearing process they are not reconciled, each takes a different road, and the tribunal pronounces the divorce.

LIVELY ADVERTISING.

A curious scene was witnessed the other day in a fashionable quarter of Paris. A fashionable dressed young man walked into a well-known cafe; then, having managed to attract some attention, he sauntered up and down the garden, finally seating himself at a small table. To him came a person who, from his conversation proved to be a tailor, and who accused him in warm words of being ungrateful, stating that he had dressed him on credit for five years. The young fellow fired up and declared himself insulted. A crowd gathered and eager eyes listened to the high words. Finally, to convince his quondam tailor that another horse was cheaper and better, the late cut pulled out the bill for the garments he wore. The name, price, address, etc., were read aloud, and the open-mouthed crowd drank it in. The enterprising tailor who got up this little drama found his profit.
