SAM HOUSTON AND BOOTH.

Gen. Sam Houston, who had just returned from his first visit to Texas, was walking up Pennsylvania avenue one evening in the winter of 1834, when he met with his old friend Booth, the tragedian. After mutual exclamations of surprise and salutation the two ascertained that they were both rooming at Browne's Indian Queen Hotel and going there they went to Booth's room. Siting down they recounted the adventures of their past lives, and as they industriously circulated the bottle many a loud shout echoed through that hall and startled the watchman in the street as they went their silent rounds. As the night wore on their excitement increased until, at the close of a thrilling story relating to his strange career, Houston exclaimed :

"Now, Booth, let's have a speech to liberty, one of those apostrophes to old Roman freedom with which you startle audiences ! "

Had Booth been inclined to refuse, he knew that his friend, when the mood was on him, would not be denied any request, however absured or difficult of performance. But the tragedian had Resolved, That by the death of DR. G. W. KLINE bolel; open day and evening. Amalgamated Association of Miners and himself entered into the spirit of his this society has lost a valuable member, and the companion, and, nothing loth, he rehearsed with magic power many of these electric passages in defense of liberty with which the English drams abounds. Houston, whose memory as well as his habits partook of the Indian character, caught up the words, and with equal force, clearness and accuracy went through each speech in regular succession. Thus they proceeded for a time, and then again sat down to renew their potations and the story of their personal adventure. Booth drank and listened while the other told of his own elevation in his native State, of his disgust at civic honors, of his home in the distant forest, of the uncontrolled freedom of the redmen, of their stoic fortitude and matchless heroism. Warmed by the recollection of those thrilling scenes, he sprang at last to his feet, and, in the tone of one amid the battle's din, fighting against the most fearful odds, exclaimed, "Now, Booth, once more for liberty!" The tragedian dared not disobey. He ran through, with all his usual energy, the tale of Mexican thraldom, of the Spanish conquest of that land, the dangers in-Cor Wb curred by that army, their commander's Oat exhortation before the battle and the Por stubborn bravery of the native chiefs. La Before him stood at that lone hour, listening with an intensity of thought and feeling which shone through his eyes, lighted his face, strained every muscle and started the sweat in great drops from his lofty brow, one who had all the fiery spirit of a Cortez and ambition of a Pizarro. Quick as thought he took up the tale and repeated the words just uttered by Booth, while the most critical precision of tone and manner. As he became excited in the recitation his spirit seemed to take fire, and with an air so determined, so frightful, that it seemed the voice of one inspired, he exclaimed at the close of a masterly extemporaneous rhapsody :
