THE curculio presents "the chief difficulty in growing plums, one of the most profitable fruits that the farmer can cultivate. The insect never lays but one egg in a plum; in the cases where two eggs are found in the same fruit they are laid by different insects. It takes a currently fully fifteen minutes to takes a curculio fully fifteen minutes to deposit her egg. First, with the beak a small piece of skin is raised, just to allow the ovipositor to be inserted. After the egg is laid the skin is doubled back over the egg so as to wrap it up. Last of all, the perculiar cresent-shaped mark is made around where the egg is laid. The object of this to deaden the skin so that the growth of the fruit will not prevent the egg from hatching. The process is a very interesting one, and is best witnessed in the cool of the morning, when the insect is not so shy first.

In laying down land to grass, the usual seeding of the English farm is thirty to forty pounds of mixed clovers, whether among a young barley crop or on a well-manured tilth in the spring. These seeds commonly include the fescues, rye grasses, meadow grasses, cocksfoot, foxtail, and the red, white until smooth; to this put enough and yellow clovers, to which sweet vernal grasses and perhaps crested dogtail are sometimes added. Six to ten pounds in all of the several fescues, eight to twelve pounds of the rye grasses named, with from two to five pounds of each of the clovers, make a sufficient seeding for an acre.

Those who breed poultry are often perplexed to know why the late hatched chicks do not thrive as well as those hatched early in the season. In nearly all the cases the difficulty may be traced to lice, which prey so greedily upon the chicks hatched in warm weather as to make them feeble and subject to disease, The best remedy for them is to dust the chicks with Persian insect powder and thoroughly clean the coops.

The great advantage and economy of employing improved stock would be still more apparent if pains were taken to make the feeding experiments exact and complete.

THE stem of a genuine mushroom is short thick and white, marked under the head with a prominent ring. The head is white and regularly convex, the edges are bent inward, the flesh is white and tirm, the under leaves are deep pink, and separate as they approach but do not touch the stem. When the mushroom grows old the net-like shape changes; it becomes brown, flat and scaly. The under leaves also turn brown. It is better when eaten young. Dr. Berenger-Ferand has described a curious people—the itinerant musicians who travel in every part of Central Africa, from the Atlantic to the Indian Ocean. They are known as Griots, and constitute a distinct confederation, under the authority of a chief, whose influences is very powerful among its scattered members, and who levies a heavy tax from their general receipts. They are regarded with fear and repugnance by the negro natives of the lands which they traverse, and are looked upon as members of an impure caste, whose dead are capable of bringing sterility and perpetual drouth to the ground in which they are buried. They are skilful in improving and reciting; some play the violin and guitar, whilst others beat the tam-tam, or play on various discordant wind instruments. Their confederation is undoubtedly of long standing. They maintain some degree of intercommunication among the African races, but frequently make mischievous use of the extraordinary licence granted them of going where they-will by fomenting quarrels among the various tribes.
