It is now proposed to make a tunnel and railway through the Spligen. The project is regarded with great favor by those interested in Lombardian railways, and support is looked for from Bavaria, Wurtemberg, and other parts of Germany. The estimated cost of the whole work is about $10,200,000.

Grehan and Quinquand say that subcutaneous injections of increasing doses of aqueous solutions of pure urea invariably terminated in tetanic convulsions and death. The convulsions resembled those produced by strychnine, and were followed by death in the course of from one to ten hours.

A system of rails for street railways, introduced by M. Marillon, is under trial by the Compagnie des Omnibus, of Paris. It consists of an ordinary bridge rail and counter rail longitudinal sleeper. The absence of wood makes the system a very durable one, but it is very inelastic.

M. P. Cazeneuve shows that the method of sterilizing liquids containing ferments by means of gypsum filters is open to certain objections. It keeps back soluble ferments and a very considerable proportion of albuminoid matters. Thus, for example, blood so treated is not merely deprived of living organisms which may have been present, but undergoes other changes.

Cast iron, says M. L. Forquignon, if heated for several days to a temperature of from about 900° to 1,000° centigrade, neither melts nor softens, but is converted into malleable iron. Its surface is covered with a grayish efflorescence. Its fracture is sometimes of a uniform black like that of a lead pencil, and sometimes riddled with large black points which are regularly distributed in the metallic paste.

In a note upon astronomical measurements, and especially on the choice of a common meridian, M. A. d'Abbadie pronounces in favor of the west coast of Flores, one of the Azores, for the chief meridian, or else for its anto-meridian, should the latter be preferred. He also proposes the adoption of a unit of 10,000 kilometres for the measurement of celestial spaces, this unit to be called a megiste, from the Greek megiston.

ZAANDAM WINDMILLS.

Zaandam is rather an important place. Many ships and boats are built there, many windmills thresh the air with their white arms, and when they don't do that they saw wood and pump water. Its inhabitants are fearfully rich; at every jaunty villa we came to, our guide stopped us to impress upon us some notion of its owner's wealth: "All these rich people are windmills."

If any one desires to see Holland from its windmill side, let that person by all means come to Zaandam, and be surprised forever after. They all seemed to be thriving and flourishing, too; and when a windmill town does flourish, it is (from a flourishing point of view) a thing to remember. It seems to lack reposefulness, if one cares for it, but for one of an active temperament it is highly stimulating. It is not the place for a moony or absentminded person, as there is always a chance of being brained by the merry wind-sail, unless one is somewhat alert.

There seems to be an unfathomable variety of individual taste in the matter of adorning and decorating some of these mills. They were nearly all as bright as paint or wash of every known hue could make them. None of the aesthetic, faded-leaf tones here, either, but good, riotous, roaring reds, greens and blues, that seemed to sit at once on any mild talk of "broken tints" or "melting combinations." Somehow they seemed to get the right tone under that delicious gray-blue haze that hangs so often over the landscape in Holland. Many mills had their little flower-gardens running down to the river's edge, and the little summer-house overhanging the water, with its inevitable little motto expressive of the owner's sweet content, like "Lust in Rust," which at first sight looks like bad and improper English. It only means rustic felicity. Here sit Van Dunk and friends in the shades of evening, smoking their pipes, sipping their beverages, and listening to the frogs.
