THE farmer who raises the best stock highest price. The animal with strong constitution is never nearly as liable to contagious or other diseases as the one with more feeble system. Some farmers are very careful to keep their cattle and horses healthy, while in a little yard they have a large lot of hogs, old and young, weak and strong, in the mud and filth up to their bellies, their corn thrown into the mud, their water into a trough half full of filth, and these farmers complain that hog raising does not pay! Get the best stock, both male and female, fully developed. Give them good, comfortable and airy sleeping places, with dry, clean yards in which to run and feed, and if convenient a good pasture in which to run a few hours each day. Give them plenty of good, clean water, milk or house slops to drink; in short, give them good, comfortable, healthy treatment, based on natural principles, and one may be sure of success. If otherwise, failure is certain. Hogs need salt as regularly as Snow White Elephant. There was exhibited at the late Mechanics' Fair held in Boston, the figure of an Elephant, made up entirely from the celebrated "Linene" Reversible Collars and Cuffs. It proved to be a great attraction. The shape was good. The body, legs and trunk being covered with Cuffs buttoned together, the tusks and tail were made from Collars. Many Praises were; given to the constructor, Mr. Snow; and sundry comments made, such as "Oute, ain't it:" "Well buttoned are very hard to dispose of and several up;" "Nice trunk he's got;" "Going to lots were thought well sold at 8 p 10 New Orleans, I guess;" "Just look at his tail, I declare it's buttoned on;" top price, they should use the Improved "That's funny enough," &c. &c. SAWDUST AND CHARCOAL, -- Sawdust and charcoal are of little use as a fertilizer. But if they are burned to ashes in a heap slowly the ashes are of great value. It will pay to haul waste charcoal dust and sawdust several miles, if they can be had for nothing, and burn them for the ashes. The easiest way to burn them is to take a hillside where they can be dumped easily, and first throw down several loads of charcoal and set this on fire, and when the fire are certainly exquisite instruments, and, has started well to throw on more and keep on until the stock is exhausted. they represent them. - Boston Journal. The fire will burn slowly for months, when the ashes will be ready for use. One hundred bushels of charcoal dust will make six or seven bushels of ashes; 100 bushels of hard wood sawdast or 200 of pine or other soft wood will make about three bushels. The ashes will be worth fifty cents a bushel. Soft wood ashes are as good as hard wood, but the soft wood makes only half as much ash as hard wood.

Young orchards, where it is desired to have a good growth of wood, may be treated to manuring this month, but care should be taken not to leave much strawy manure piled against the trunks of the trees as it may form a harbor for mice, which will gnaw the bark and often entirely ruin the tree, if a deep snow happens to prevent their getting out to procure better food. The blossom buds having already formed, manuring now will not increase their number, although it may increase the ability of the tree to mature the blossoms into fruit. As it is desirable to increase the size of young trees and not to force a large crop upon them, it follows that manuring now is better than it would be in Spring or Summer, when the strength might go to make blossom buds, and thus induce overbearing, to the future weakening of the tree.

HAY in the stack may be measured, an agricultural paper says, by the following process: For timothy, square the diameter, multiply by eight, and that product by the height of the stack, reckoning up to one-third of the distance from where it begins to taper off, to the top or apex; cut off the right hand figure, and divide by seventy-five; the result will be in tons. Should there be a remainder, multiply by 2000, and divide by seventy-five; the quotient will be pounds. For clover hay, square the diameter, multiply by the height of the stack, as for timothy, and that product by seven; cut off three right-hand figures, and all on the left will be tons; then multiply the figures upon the right by 2000, cut off three from the right, and all on the left will be pounds.

If the Winter cabbages are growing so fast that they are likely to burst open before the time comes to put them into the cellar, or pit, and there is no market for them, their growth may be checked by pulling them about half up and tipping them over on one side, leaving just roots enough in the soil to keep them green. Do not do this until they have made solid heads. Tip them toward the north, to prevent scalding the top of the head in the sun.

For lawns, nitrate of soda is a cleanly and effective fertilizer; sprinkled broad-cast at the rate of half to three-quarters of a pound to the square rod, it promotes the growth of the grass, and imparts a vivid green color to it. The best time to apply it is just after a rain.

THE Fall is much the best time for topdressing orchards, especially of the year. If applied now it secures a healthy growth next Spring, while if manur-ing is delayed until then the tree does not get much benefit from it causing a late succulent growth which is very liable to blight.

DYSPEPSIA

Causes its victims to be miserable, hopeless, confused, and depressed in mind, very irritable, languid, and drowsy. It is a disease which does not get well of itself. It requires careful, persistent attention, and a remedy to throw off the causes and tone up the digestive organs till they perform their duties willingly. Hood's Sarsaparilla has proven just the required remedy in hundreds of cases.

"I have taken Hood's Sarsaparilla for dyspepsia, from which I have suffered two years. I tried many other medicines, but none proved so satisfactory as Hood's Sarsaparilla." THOMAS COOK, Brush Electric Light Co., New York City.
