A FORMER PROPRIETOR OF THE SPRING MILLS HOUSE COMMITTED TO JAIL.

We copy the following concerning Mr. Geo. B. Nash, not long ago proprietor of the Spring Mills House, from the Philad. Press. It is not generally considered that Mr. Nash's conduct while in this county was in accordance with strict rules of honor. His former acquaintances here will look with interst for further developments in the case. The dispatch in the Press is as follows:

Media, Dec. 4.—George B. Nash, at present the proprietor of the Dennis House, at Thirteenth and Walnut streets, Philadelphia, was convicted in the Delaware Co. Quarter Session yesterday of larceny as bailee. In October, 1883, he was proprietor of the Ridley Park Hotel, at Ridley Park, Delaware Co.

In that month he advertised for a cashier and book-keeper who could deposit with his employer over $1000 as security. This advertisement was answered by Cornelius McCahill, a young Irishman, of New York City, and he accepted the position at $50 a month and board. He came on to Ridley Park, deposited his $1000 with Nash and at once entered upon the duties of his new position.

McCahill the only witness called by the prosecution, testified that he deposited the $1000 in Nash's hands. On the witness stand McCahill presented a copy of the agreement, the original being given to Nash. He also produced a receipt for the $1000. He said he was at the Ridley Park hotel in Nash's employ nearly 5 months. He only received $29 the whole time he was there, and repeatedly demanded his deposited money. Nash refused to return it.

The defense made strenuous efforts to prove that the money was only a loan and that the defendant was not criminally liable; that when McCahill deposited the money he was told it was to pay a former check of Nash's. Nash denied the existence of any agreement, but said he had given McCahill a bill of sale on the goods in the house. The bill of sale was afterwards shown to be a myth. Nash had from time to time given promissory notes for the money, but none of them were paid.

Judge Clayton's charge was not favorable to the defendant. He said that if the jury believed that the money was deposited, as was alleged by the prosecutor, Nash was clearly guilty of the charge of larceny as bailee. He said he had given a bill of sale and then acknowledged selling the goods afterward. The jury were out less than half an hour. When the jury came in the defendant, who had been out on bail, had started for home, and a couple of officers were immediately sent after him. After some time Nash was brought into court, and his counsel moved for a new trial and arrest of judgment. The motion for a new trial will be argued on Monday next. In the meantime Nash has been committed to jail.

George B. Nash is a man well known in Philadelphia and vicinity. For some years past he has been in the hotel business, but never very long in one place. A few years ago he conducted a large house, with a good run of patronage, at Atlantic City, and the past summer he conducted a small house at Cape May, opposite Congress Hall, called the St. George.

A NECESSITY.

Times may be as dull as they can be, and business at a stand still, yet people must of necessity wear boots and shoes—this no sane person will dispute. And since these articles are a necessity it is well for people to know where to go to get what will please and suit them. A visit to the store of Powers & Son is all that is needed to satisfy any gentleman or lady that they keep the largest and finest stock in this section of the state. As for prices the times make it necessary that they should sell at the least possible margin, and this is just what Powers & Son are doing. They adapt themselves to the wants of the people in assortment as well as to their pinched circumstances from the dullness of the times. Powers & Son never impose upon customers—they study to please.

——Quite a serious affair occurred at Woodward, a few weeks ago, as we are informed. A bad feeling existed for some time between a young man named Etlinger and Mr. Treatser employed at one of the sawmills. A party of millhands being in at Woodward, a quarrel arose in the store. Etlinger went outside and stood at the door and as one of the men was about to pass out on his way home, carrying a can of oil, Etlinger struck him across the head with a club, knocking him down, and then followed up the blow with several others, when the club or billy flew out of his hand and he ran home. The man had his skull fractured by the first blow. Etlinger was arrested and taken to Bellefonte, where he secured bail for his appearance at next term of court.

QUEEN CHARLOTTE'S ISLAND.

Probably no other group in the wide world carries more curiosities, natural and artificial, than Queen Charlotte's Island; few, I think, have as many in the same extent of country. The geologist, the mineralogist, the botanist, the agriculturist, may each of them find here a wide field for research, while the antiquarian, the teleologist and others of the ilk would be highly interested. In their strange and wonderful sea margins; in their not less wonderful caverns, in which nature's work in long past ages is written as plainly as on the pages of a book; in their rocks, whose volcanic contortions smite the beholder with mute amazement; in their shells which as fossils are found deep down in the seams of their anthracite coal, while near Cape Ball the same sort are found alive in the sands of the seashore—of these the geologist could write volumes. In their quartz ledges which have been traced from shore to shore, in which gold is plainly visible in coal measures and other minerals, a wide field may yet be found for the mineralogist. The various kinds of plants belonging to these islands, the tiny flowers in their natural beauty peeping out from behind the melting snow drift on the lonely mountains, the modest lupins and the luscious strawberries, nature's gift to man, and even the broad leaved bush grass—all these, as they follow in the wake of the of the receding waters of Queen Charlotte's stormy seas, would yield an ample store for the botanist. Among their snow clad mountains, by the wild torrent and the gentle river, by the lights and shades reflected by the sunset hills in autumn's shortening days, a boundless range is offered for the pencil's magic skill, while the broad acres of rich alluvial bottoms and the nutritious grasses waving in the breeze would lead the farmer to say: —"Oh, if these lands were mine and my flocks and herds ranged over the luxuriant plenty they afford!" To the antiquarian, the ethnologist and other scientists, the rich carving on the columns and the quaint legends they depict and the legendary lore of the people would afford a vast untrodden field. Even the conchologist would feel at home on the abalone shell-covered shores of Pillon Bay and on the rocks of North Island. To the piscatorial disciples of Izzak Walton an unlimited amount of sport is furnished by the streams. In them they can find the silver salmon and the dainty little trout of the mountain rill. If tired of these and wishing large sports, let them go to the greater depths of ocean, down to where the stormy winds of winter are never felt, to where, deep in the ocean's caves, they will find a myriad throng of those denizens of the deep, the black cod.

JUDGING OF DISTANCE.

It is very difficult to judge of distance at sea. Refraction always changes the apparent place of an object, so that we seem to see the sun after it has gone below the horizon. A more striking but less frequent phenomenon of refraction is that known as mirage. Refraction also affects the color of an object. The media through which light passes has more or less effect upon the ray. In a fog objects are dimly seen, the effect resembling that due to distance; hence objects look larger, for the eye judges of the size of an object by multiplying the size of the image or impression received by the square of the distance, while the latter is estimated from the indistinctness of the object. In the fog the apparent distance is increased, but the eye interprets it as due to the opposite cause. On looking at the photograph of a tree, a church, a monument or a pyramid, it is not possible to form a correct idea of its size unless a man or animal is seen in the same view, with which to compare it. In nature, especially on land, the intervening objects that lead up to it give the data on which to calculate the distance. Where none intervene, as in looking from peak to peak, the eye must depend on distinctness, and where the air is very clear and transparent, as in Colorado, distances seem less than they are. If the object is seen through transparent, but colored, media, the form remains true, but the colors are changed.

CONTENTS OF AN OHIO MOUND.

An Ohio mound was recently explored. It is located near the centre of Morgan Township, is about fifty feet in diameter at the base and six feet high, the top being a level circle thirty-five feet across. The investigation revealed that the mound was formed chiefly of surface soil and made wholly on top of the ground. At the depth of three feet was found a ring of ashes five feet in width and two feet deep, containing bits of charcoal. The diameter of the ring is about twenty feet. In and about this were found human bones that had evidently been burned. Inside this, lying at the very bottom of the mound on the original soil, were found in a tolerable state of preservation the skeletons of four full-grown persons, one of them a woman, upon whom lay the bones of a well-developed infant. The bodies were huddled together without any systematic arrangement. The skulls were of good size and shape. Only the bones of one showed signs of fire.

We are sorry to announce the death of that estimable lady, Mrs. J. Shannon McCormick, of near State College, which occurred at her home Tuesday morning, 25th ult., of capillary brochitis, at the age of 59 years, 1 day. The deceased was the youngest daughter of John Beck, Sr., dec'd, one of the first settlers in Snydertown, Walker twp., where she was born and raised. Early in youth she joined the Lutheran church of which she was an active and efficient member up to the time of her death. She lived an exemplary Christian life, and in her death the church loses an active and efficient member; the husband a worthy helpmate in life; the children a kind, affectionate mother; the community a highly esteemed neighbor, and the poor a liberal friend. She will be missed by many but their loss is her gain. "Blessed are they that die in the Lord."
