Speaking about dust explosions, a case from Germany is worthy of notice.

A sack of flour, falling on stairs, opened and scale of the contents in a cloud through the lower room, where a burning to flame set fire to the dust, causing an explosion which lifted a part of the roof off the mill and broke almost all the windows. There are the almost all the windows. There can be no doubt that the majority of dust explosions are, like mine disasters, due to open lights, and as this danger can be practically avoided by the use of the incandescent electric lights, there really eems to be no valid reason why it should not be introduced more generally, as those establishments which have used it express themselves in its favor, No matter how carefully other lights are guarded, an absolute safety, as long as the globes are intact, is offered only by the incandescent lamps, where the atmosphere has no access whatever to the flame. The above instance teaches us how little is necessary to start an ex-plosion in the cleanest mill, so long as open lights are used; how much greater must the danger be in an establishment where the air is constantly charged with dust, and where cleanliness is looked upon as of minor importance,
